drunk (drŭngk), p. p. (formerly also pret.) of DRINK. Hence: a. [ME. dronke, drunke, dronken, drunken, AS. druncen. Orig. the same as drunken, p. p. of drink. See DRINK.] 1. Intoxicated with or as with strong drink; under the influence of an intoxicant, esp. an alcoholic liquor, so that the use of the faculties is materially impaired; inebriated; drunken; — predicatively; rarely used attributively (except Scot. or Dial.); as, the man is drunk (not, a drunk man).

Drunk with recent prosperity. Macaulay.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture or liquid.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Deut. xxxii. 42.

Syn. — DRUNK, DRUNKEN, INTOXICATED, INEBRIATED. DRUNK is the plain-spoken, direct, and inclusive term; INTOXICATED may be exactly synonymous with drunk, but is often applied more or less euphemistically to one who is but slightly under the influence of liquor; INEBRIATED, in common parlance, is chiefly euphemistic; as, (colloq.) drunk as a fiddler, a lord, dead drunk; "I have seen Sheridan drunk, too, with all the world; but his intoxication was that of Bacchus, and Porson's that of Silenus" (Byron); "My friend requested me to add, that he was firmly persuaded you were intoxicated during a portion of the evening, and possibly unconscious of the extent of the insult you were guilty of" (Dickens). All these words are used in a fig. sense; as, drunk with joy; "drunk with divine enthusiasm" (Shelley); "Even a man like Novalis . . . could find no better name for him [Spinoza] than a Gott trunkner Mann — a God intoxicated man" (Froude); "the rush of men inebriate with rage" (Shelley); "a sweet inebriated ecstasy" (Crashaw). Drunk and DRUNKEN differ in that drunk is commonly used predicatively, while drunken is chiefly attributive; as, "They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man" (Ps. cvii. 27). Drunken frequently suggests habitual inebriation; it also applies to whatever pertains to or proceeds from intoxication; as, "Stephano, my drunken butler" (Shak.); "a drunken sleep" (id.); a drunken brawl. See ABSTINENCE.

drunk'ard (drŭngk'ärd), n. [drunk + -ard.] 1. One who habitually drinks strong liquors immoderately; one whose habit it is to get drunk; a toper; a sot.

The pulverized earth is let fall from a height, and the wind disperses everything except the gold dust, which settles in a cradle, tray, or cloth. — d. bob, a boy who goes in for land sports, as cricket or football. Eton College, Eng. — d. bone, Mining, smithsonite, or carbonate of zinc. — d. bridge, a bridge over a dry way, as a road or railroad, not over water. — d.-bulb thermometer, Physics, an ordinary thermometer, esp. that one of the two similar thermometers of a psychrometer whose bulb is unmoistened. — d. casting, casting from dried molds of sand. — d. castor, a kind of beaver; — called also parchment beaver. — d. cell. Elec. a A voltaic cell whose contents are made practically solid by the use of some absorbent, as sawdust, gelatin, etc.; esp., a cell of the Leclanché type in which a mixture of plaster of Paris, flour, and sal ammoniac takes the place of the solution. b An ordinary voltaic cell sealed so as to prevent spilling. — d. coal, a coal containing little volatile matter. — d. concentration, Mining, the process of separating pulverized ore or gold-bearing material according to the specific gravity of its components in air, instead of in a liquid. — d. cooper, a cooper who makes barrels, etc., for holding goods that are dry, as sugar, resin, etc. — d. cup, Med., a cup used for dry cupping. — d. cupping. See CUPPING. — d. distillation, Chem., the distillation of substances in a dry condition, no water or other volatile solvent being added; — usually syn. with destructive distillation. — d. dock, a dock from which the water may be shut or pumped out; esp., one in the form of a chamber having walls and a floor, often of masonry and communicating with deep water, but having appliances for excluding it; — used in constructing or repairing ships. The name includes several varieties, as graving docks, floating docks, hydraulic docks, etc. — d. exchange, Law, a method of evading the usury laws, esp. those of the Tudor period, by the use of fictitious bills of exchange. — dry fat. See DRY VAT. — d. fly, Angling, an artificial fly that is floated on the water. — d. fog, Meteor., a fog which prevails when the temperature of the atmosphere is several degrees above its dew point. It has been believed to be caused, in some instances at least, by coal-tar vapors condensing upon the fog particles and preventing their evaporation. — d. fruit. a Cured fruit. b Bot. Any fruit, as a capsule, achene, etc., in which the pericarp is not succulent or pulpy. — d. gas, power gas formed without steam in the producer. — d. goods, Com., textile fabrics, cottons, woolens, linen, silks, laces, etc., — in distinction from groceries. Chiefly U. S. — d. house, a drying house. — d. light, pure unobstructed light; hence, a clear, impartial view.

Everything is examined and judged in the dry light of the understanding. G. P. Fisher.

— d. lodging, lodging without board. — d. masonry. See MASONRY. — d. Mass. Eccl. = MISSA SICCA. — d measure, a system of measures of volume for dry or coarse articles, esp. the common system in which two pints make one quart, eight quarts one peck, and four pecks one bushel. — d. meter. See METER, n. — d. method, Chem., dry process. — d. multure. Scots Law. See MULTURE. — d. needle, dry point. — d. nurse. a A nurse who attends and feeds a child by hand. Cf. WET NURSE. b One who aids or instructs another. Slang. — d. ores, ores valuable for gold or silver, but containing little or no lead and much silica, and so requiring additions of lead and fluxes for successful treatment. — d. pile, Physics, a form of the voltaic pile, constructed of a large number of disks of paper which are silvered or tinned on one side and coated with manganese dioxide on the other. It affords a feeble current, and is chiefly useful in the construction of electroscopes of great delicacy. Called also Zamboni's or Deluc's pile, from the names of the two earliest constructors of it. — d. pipe, Steam Boilers, an antipriming pipe. — d. plate, Photog., a sensitized plate that is exposed in a dry condition. — d.-plate process. See COLLODION PROCESS. — d. pleurisy, Med., a form of pleurisy in which the exudation is mainly fibrinous. — d. point. Fine Arts. a An engraving made with the needle instead of the burin, in which the work is done nearly as in etching, but is finished without the use of acid. b A print from such an engraving, usually upon paper. c The needle with which such an engraving is made. — d. process, Chem., any process in which the use of liquids is largely avoided, as in the fire assay for gold. — d. puddling. Metal. See PUDDLING. — d. rent, Eng. Law, a rent seck, or one reserved without a clause of distress. Obs. — d. rot. a A decay of seasoned timber, caused esp. by the polyporaceous fungus Merulius lacrymans, but also by several species of Polyporus. The decay does not appear in perfectly dry wood, as these fungi develop only in a moist medium. The name probably arose from the fact that seasoned and not green timber is affected. b Loosely, any of various fungous diseases of vegetables or fruits, or the fungus causing it; esp., any of several diseases of potatoes and other tuberous roots; also, any of the parasitic fungi causing the disease. Dry rot of potatoes is due principally to Fusarium solani, which is known only in the conidial state. — d. sand, Founding, sand artificially dried after being made into a mold and blackened; — distinguished from green sand. — d. smoke, the holding of an unlighted cigar or pipe in the mouth as if smoking. Colloq. — d. steam, steam containing no free moisture, or water not transformed into gas. Cf. SUPERHEAT. — d. steel, steel that has a lusterless sandy-looking fracture which is without the characteristic blue cast. It is weak and impure. — d. stove, a hothouse for xerophytic plants. — d. strawberry, the barren strawberry. — d. sulphuric acid, sulphuric acid absorbed in about a third or quarter of its weight of kieselguhr, for safety in transportation. — d. trust, a passive trust. — d. vat, a vat, basket, or other receptacle for dry articles. Obs. — d. wash. See WASH, n., 11 c. — d. way, Chem., dry process. — d. winds, Meteor., the winds at any place least frequently followed by rain or snow.

Dry Cell. A Zinc Pot forming negative element of the cell; B Carbon Rod forming positive element; C Exciting Compound; D Depolarizing Agent; E Binding Posts.

dry (drī), v. t.; DRIED (drīd); DRY'ING. [AS. drȳgan. See DRY, a.] To make dry; — sometimes with up; specif.: a To free or rid from water, or from moisture of any kind; as, to dry the eyes; the wind dries the earth. b To take away or remove (water or moisture), as by draining off or causing to evaporate or to be absorbed; to cause to cease flowing or being secreted as a natural flow; as, to dry one's tears. c To cause (a cow, etc.) to become dry, or to stop giving milk.

du′al-in (-ĭn), n. [dual, a. + -in.] Chem. A variety of dynamite consisting of 4 to 5 parts nitroglycerin, 3 parts sawdust, and 2 parts saltpeter.

du′al-ism (dū′ăl-ĭz′m), n. [Cf. F. dualisme.] 1. State of being dual, or twofold; a twofold division; any system which is founded on a double principle, or a twofold distinction.

2. Theol. a The doctrine that the universe is under the dominion of two opposing principles, a good and an evil. Zoroastrianism is the typical view. b A view of man as constituted of two original and independent elements, as matter and spirit.

3. Philos. Any theory which considers the ultimate nature of the universe to be twofold, or to be constituted by two mutually irreducible elements, as, for example, thought and matter; — contrasted with monism and pluralism.

Aristotelian realism is both a monism of substance and a dualism of body and soul. Thos. Case (Encyc. Brit.).

4. Chem. The dualistic system or theory.

5. Gram. Expression of duality, as by the dual.

6. Bot. Dimorphism. Rare or Obs.

du′al-ist, n. 1. An adherent of dualism.

At the present day realism is despised on the ground that its differentiation of body and soul, natural and supernatural, ignores the unity of being. Indeed, in order to oppose this unity of being to the realistic duality, both materialists and idealists nowadays arrogate to themselves the title of monists, and call realists dualists by way of disparagement. Thos Case (Encyc. Brit.).

2. One who administers two offices. Obs. or R. Fuller.

du′al-is′tic (dū′ăl-ĭs′tĭk), a. Consisting of two; dual, pertaining to, or of the nature of, dualism or duality.

dualistic formula, Chem., a formula written in accordance with the dualistic theory; as, $CaO{\cdot}SO_3$ is the dualistic formula for calcium sulphate ($CaSO_4$). — d. system or theory, Chem, the theory, originated by Lavoisier and developed by Berzelius, that all definite compounds are binary in their nature, and consist of two distinct constituents, themselves simple or complex, and possessed of opposite electrical properties. Cf. UNITARY THEORY.

du-al′i-ty (dū-ăl′ĭ-tĭ), n. [L dualitas: cf. F. dualité.] Quality or state of being dual.

Du′at (dōō′ăt), n. [Egypt. tuat.] Egypt. Myth. The underworld or "deep," one of the abodes of the dead, through which the sun passed by night. It was conceived as a gloomy monster-tenanted Hades In later myth it was the scene of the judgment of souls. Cf. AMENTI.

Q. Rivinus (1652–1723), German anatomist], Anat., the small efferent ducts of the sublingual gland. Some unite to form a tube (called the duct of Bartholin) which joins Wharton's duct; others open separately into the mouth.

duc'tile (dŭk'tĭl; 182), a. [L. ductilis, fr. ducere to lead: cf. F. ductile. See DUCT.] 1. Capable of being permanently drawn out or hammered thin; — said esp. of metals; capable of being molded or worked; pliable, malleable; specif., in technical use, capable of being drawn out into wire or thread; as, gold is extremely ductile.

2. Capable of being led in channels; — said of water.

3. Easily led; tractable; complying; yielding to motives, persuasion, or instruction. "Forms their ductile minds to human virtues." Philips.

Syn. — Pliant, pliable, flexible; compliant, docile, facile, manageable. — DUCTILE, PLASTIC, MALLEABLE, TRACTABLE are here compared in their fig senses. That is DUCTILE which is pliant, flexible, or capable of being drawn, conducted, or molded, whether with or without effort (as, "soft dispositions, which ductile be," Donne); that is PLASTIC which is readily responsive (esp. like clay or wax) to shaping influences; that is MALLEABLE which may be fashioned (like metals) under pressure or stress; that is TRACTABLE (see OBSTINATE) which is easily handled or managed. See FLEXIBLE, ELASTIC.

Smooth, ductile, and even, his fancy must flow . . .
And catch in its progress a sensible glow. Cowper.

[Imagination] recoils from everything but the plastic, the pliant, and the indefinite. Wordsworth.

Their tempers, doubtless, are rendered pliant and malleable in the fiery furnace of domestic tribulation. Irving

Two others also I have struck out, another critic having objected to them. I think I am a very tractable sort of a poet. Cowper.

DUELLO.] 1. A combat between two persons; specif., formerly, a combat fought in trial by wager of battle. Obs.

2. A combat between two persons fought with deadly weapons by agreement, usually under formal conditions and in the presence of witnesses on each side, called seconds. It usually arises from an injury done or an affront given by one to the other. Once very common among men of social standing, it is now a crime in all English-speaking countries.

In sketching the history of the judicial combat we have traced the parentage of the modern duel. Strip the former of its legality, and divest it of its religious sanction, and the latter remains. . . . The so-called American duel, where the two parties draw lots, and the loser is under moral obligation to kill himself with, in a specified time, is not recognized as a duel (not being a bath) by any foreign code except that of Austria. Encyc. Brit

5. Dull; stupid. Colloq., U. S.
Syn. — Silent, still, quiet. — DUMB, MUTE, SPEECHLESS, INARTICULATE. DUMB and MUTE are often used interchangeably; as, deaf and dumb, deaf mutes (for technical distinctions, see defs.). Dumb, more frequently than mute, implies lack of the power of speech, esp. as in the case of brute animals and inanimate objects, mute emphasizes the fact of silence, from whatever cause; as, "dumb idols" (Hab. ii. 18); "some mute inglorious Milton" (Gray); "As children of weak age lend life to the dumb stones whereon to vent their rage . . . so, loath to suffer mute, we . . . make gods to whom to impute the ills we ought to bear" (M. Arnold). In general, dumb implies more absolute inability to speak, or a more compelling cause of silence, than mute; as, "All sat mute, pondering the danger with deep thoughts" (Milton); "Deep shame had struck me dumb" (Shak.); cf. mute misery, dumb misery. SPEECHLESS commonly implies deprivation of the power of speech; as, "I am struck dumb with the assurance of his folly — absolutely mute and speechless" (Scott). INARTICULATE, as here compared, implies either lack of the power to speak at all (as, "the inarticulate people of the dead," Shelley), or (esp.) inability to speak intelligibly, on account of some powerful emotion; as, inarticulate with rage. See SILENT, STILL.

du'pli-cate (dū'plĭ-kāt), a. [L. duplicatus, p. p. of duplicare to double, fr. duplex double, twofold. See DUPLEX.]

1. Double; twofold.

2. That is a duplicate of something.

duplicate proportion or ratio, Math., the proportion or ratio of squares. Thus, in geometrical proportion, the first term is said to be to the third in the duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second. Thus, in 3, 6, 12, 24, the ratio of 3 to 12 is the duplicate of that of 3 to 6, or as the square of 3 is to the square of 6. — d. whist, a form of whist in playing which the hands are preserved as dealt and played again by other players, as when each side holds in the second round the cards played by the opposing side in the first round.

du'pli-cate, n. That which exactly resembles or corresponds to something else; another, correspondent to the first; hence, a copy; transcript; counterpart; as, a duplicate of a dispatch; specif., Law, an original instrument repeated; a document the same as another in essential particulars, differing from a copy in being valid as an original.

Syn. — DUPLICATE, COPY, TRANSCRIPT, FACSIMILE, REPLICA. A DUPLICATE (see etym.) is strictly a double of something else; the word may be used of that which exactly corresponds to, or is the counterpart of, any object whatsoever; as, a duplicate of a book, an engraving, a piece of furniture, duplicate bills, to make out a receipt in duplicate. A COPY is a reproduction of something else, often without the exact correspondence which belongs to a duplicate; as, two antique medals from the same die are duplicates, while a modern reproduction of either is a copy. TRANSCRIPT is commonly confined to the copy of a writing; as, to take a transcript of a deed. A FACSIMILE is an exact reproduction; it differs from duplicate in implying that the one object is an imitation of the other; as, two First Folio Shakespeares may be duplicates, but the facsimiles are not duplicates of the original. A REPLICA is a copy of a work of art, (properly) by the maker of the original; as, "The Loreto replica of the 'Recognition of the Holy Child' is . . . , indeed, not entirely from Lotto's own hand" (B. Berenson). See PATTERN, IMAGE, EXAMPLE.

du'pli-cate (-kāt), v. t.; DU'PLI-CAT'ED (-kā'tĕd); DU'PLI-CAT'ING (-kā'tĭng). 1. To double; to fold; to render double. 2. To make a duplicate of (something); to make a copy or transcript of. Glanvill.

du'pli-ca-tive (dū'plĭ-kā-tĭv), a. Having the quality of duplicating; tending to duplication.

du'pli-ca'to- (dū'plĭ-kā'tō-). [L. duplicatus doubled.] A prefix denoting doubly; as in duplicato-dentate.

du'pli-ca'tor (dū'plĭ-kā'tẽr), n. [L., a doubler.] A copying machine, as a device for duplicating typewriting, or an attachment to a cash register for stamping a payment check for a customer and at the same time registering the amount for permanent record.

du'pli-ca-ture (-kȧ-tūr), n. [Cf. F. duplicature.] A doubling; a fold, as of a membrane.

Du'pli-ci-den-ta'ta (dū'plĭ-sĭ-dĕn-tā'tȧ), n. [NL.; L. duplex, -icis, double + dentatus toothed.] Zool. A suborder of rodents consisting of the rabbits and hares (Leporidæ) and pikas (Ochotonidæ). They have two pairs of upper incisor teeth, one pair of which is smaller and situated behind the other. — du'pli-ci-den'tate (-dĕn'tāt), a. — du-plic'i-dent (dū-plĭs'ĭ-dĕnt), a. & n.

du-plic'i-ty (dū-plĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [F. duplicité, L. duplicitas, fr. duplex double. See DUPLEX.]

1. Doubleness of heart or speech; deception by pretending to entertain one set of feelings and acting under the influence of another; bad faith; double dealing.

2. Doubleness, as of stars; a twofold state; duplexity.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. I. Watts.

3. Law. a The use of two or more distinct allegations or answers where one is sufficient. b In indictments, the union of two incompatible offenses.

Syn. — Double dealing, dissimulation, guile, deception, falsehood. See DECEIT du'ra-bil'i-ty (dū'rȧ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. durabilitas: cf. OF. durabilité.] State or quality of being durable; lastingness, durableness.

du'ra-ble (dū'rȧ-b'l), a. [F., fr. L. durabilis, fr. durare to last. See DURE.] Able to endure or continue in a particular condition; lasting; not perishable or changeable; not wearing out or decaying soon; enduring; as, durable cloth; durable happiness.

An interest which . . . must be so durable. De Quincey.

Syn. — Permanent, enduring, firm, stable, continuing, constant, persistent. See LASTING.

du'ra ma'ter (dū'rȧ mā'tẽr). Often called simply du'ra. [L., lit., hard mother. The membrane was called mater, or mother, because it was formerly thought to give rise to every membrane of the body.] Anat. The tough, fibrous membrane, lined with endothelium on the inner surface, which envelops the brain and spinal cord external to the arachnoid and pia mater. In the cranium it closely lines the bone and does not dip down between the convolutions, though certain large supporting folds, as the falx cerebri and tentorium cerebelli, are derived from it, and it contains numerous blood vessels and venous sinuses. The dura of the spinal cord is separated from the bone (which has a separate periosteum) by a considerable space. It does not enter the fissures of the cord and contains no venous sinuses. Cf. PIA MATER; ARACHNOID, a., 2.

du-ra'men (dū-rā'mĕn), n. [L., hardness, a hardened, i. e., ligneous, vine branch, fr. durare to harden. See DURE.] Bot. The hard, tough heartwood of a dicotyledonous tree, consisting of dead tissues compacted by the growth of tyloses, and rendered darker in color by the development of tannins and coloring matter. The duramen is invested on the outer side by the living sapwood or alburnum, which annually contributes to its growth.

dur'ance (dūr'ȧns), n. [OF. durance duration, fr. L. durans, -antis, p. pr. of durare to endure, last. See DURE.]

1. Continuance; duration; durability; also, endurance. Obs. or Archaic.

Of how short durance was this new-made state! Dryden.

2. Imprisonment; restraint of the person; custody by a jailer; duress. Shak. "Durance vile." Burns.

2. Obs. a Durableness or endurance in use. b Hardening.

dur'a-tive (dūr'ȧ-tĭv), a. Continuing; not completed; implying duration or continuance.

dur'bar (dûr'bär), n. [Hind. darbār, fr. Per. darbār house, court, hall of audience; dar door, gate + bār court, assembly.] An audience hall; the court of a native prince; a state levee; a formal reception of native princes, given by the governor general. India.

Durch'mus'te-rung (dōōrk'mōōs'tĕ-rōōng), n. [G., examination, scrutiny.] Astron. A classic 19th-century catalogue of 324,000 stars of the Northern Hemisphere, to the 9-10th magnitude, begun by Argelander, and extended by Schönfeld to the 22° parallel of south declination.

Dur'den, Dame (dûr'dĕn). 1. The heroine of an old English ballad, a country gentlewoman, who was notable as a housewife, keeping five men "to use the spade and flail" and five maids "to carry the milken-pail."

2. Esther Summerson, the heroine of Dickens's "Bleak House;"—playfully so called by Mr. Jarndyce and other characters in the story.

dure (dūr), a [L. durus; akin to Ir. & Gael. dur dull, stubborn, W. dŷr certain, sure; cf. Gr. δύναμις force.] Hard; harsh; severe; rough; toilsome. Archaic.

The winter is severe, and life is dure and rude. W. H. Russell.

dure, v. i. [F. durer, L. durare to harden, be hardened, to endure, last, fr. durus hard. See DURE, a.] To endure; to last; to continue. Obs., Dial. Eng., or Archaic.

Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while. Matt. viii. 21.

dure, v. t. To sustain or endure. Obs.

Du'ren-dal' (dū'rĕn-dăl'), or Du'ran-dal' (dū'răn-dăl'), n. [OF. Durendal.] The marvelous sword of Roland or Orlando. According to the "Chanson de Roland," the hero received it from Charlemagne when God commanded the king to give it to some brave count. When dying, the hero tried in vain to break it on the rocks, lest it should fall into craven or infidel hands. In some of the Orlando romances it is said to be the workmanship of fairies, who invested it with such wonderful properties that its owner was able to cleave the Pyrenees with it at a blow.

du'rene (dū'rēn), n. [L. durus hard; — because solid at ordinary temperatures.] Chem. A colorless crystalline hydrocarbon, $C_6H_2(CH_3)_4$, with a camphorlike odor, occurring in coal tar. It is a tetramethyl derivative of benzene.

Dü'rer-esque', or Du'rer-esque' (dü'rẽr-ĕsk'), a. Resembling in style or manner the work of Albrecht Dürer (1471-1528), a German artist noted for his accurate and delicate drawing and his delineation of character, esp. in his engravings, which are characterized by profuse and literal detail.

du'ress (dū'rĕs; dū-rĕs'; 277), n. [OF. duresse, durece, hardship, severity, L. duritia, durities, fr. durus hard. See DURE.] 1. Hardness; harshness; cruelty; affliction. Obs.

2. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty; also, constraint; pressure; compulsion.

The agreements . . . made with the landlords during the time of slavery, are only the effect of duress and force. Burke.

3. Law. Compulsion or constraint by which a person is illegally forced to do or forbear some act. This may be by actual imprisonment or physical violence to the person, or by such violence threatened (specif., called duress per mi'nas [pẽr mī'năs]). The violence or threats must be such as to inspire a person of ordinary firmness with the fear of serious injury to the person (loss of liberty, or of life or limb), reputation, or of fortune. Such violence or threats exercised upon the wife, husband, ascendants, or descendants of a person, may constitute duress of him. See COERCION.

2. That which is required by one's station or occupation; any assigned service or business; as, the duties of a soldier; to be on duty. "Records sweet of duties done." Keble.

3. That which a person is bound by moral obligation to do, or refrain from doing; that which one ought to do; service morally obligatory. Duty among savages is determined by tribal tradition, totemic restrictions, taboos, and the like. The conception of duty as subjective, that is, as a sense, appears to be derived from the Greek ideal of requisite, appropriate, or fitting conduct, and from the Jewish and Christian conception of obligation to obey divinely revealed law. Duty is considered by some modern ethicists to be the fundamental conception of ethics and to be subject to intuitive knowledge; by others it is conceived as that which is ethically valid because sanctioned by law, society, or religion.

4. That which one is bound to render or pay; a material due of any sort; a charge or payment due. Obs.

5. Any payment, service, or other render imposed and recoverable by law or custom, esp. one payable to the government; specif., any sum of money required by law to be paid as a tax on the importation, exportation, or consumption of goods; a customs, excise, or the like.

The term duty is the most comprehensive next to the generical term tax; and practically, in Great Britain (whence we take our general ideas of taxes, duties, imposts, excises, customs, etc.), embraces taxes on stamps, tolls for passage, etc., and is not confined to taxes on importation only. 3 Dallas 174.

We know of no reason for holding otherwise than that the words "direct taxes," on the one hand, and "duties, imposts, and excises," on the other, were used in the Constitution in their natural and obvious sense. . . . Cooley (On Taxation, p. 3) says that the word "duty" ordinarily "means an indirect tax imposed on the importation, exportation, or consumption of goods;" having a broader meaning than custom, which is a duty imposed upon imports or exports, . . . and Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution (§ 952), expresses the view that it is not unreasonable to presume that the word "duties" was used as equivalent to "customs" or "imposts" by the framers of the Constitution, since in other clauses it was provided that "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State," and that "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports," etc. 158 U. S. 601, 619, 622.

6. Steam Engin. The efficiency of an engine, boiler, and furnace, considered as one machine, expressed as the work done by a definite amount of fuel (one bushel (94 lbs. old standard) or one cwt. (112 lbs., Eng., or 100 lbs., U. S.) of coal). A coal consumption of 2 lbs. per horse-power hour, the modern way of reckoning, is equiv. to a duty of 99 millions (foot pounds), U. S. measure, or about 110 millions, Eng. measure.

7. Generally, work done by a given machine, etc., under given conditions as to time, energy, or the like. Thus the duty of a stamp may be stated as the number of tons of ore crushed to a given degree of fineness in a given time.

8. Amount of water required per acre for irrigation; also,

2. Folklore. One of a class of diminutive manlike beings popularly conceived as versed in the lore of minerals, as adept miners and skillful artificers. In Teutonic myths they are the forgers of the wonderful weapons and treasures of the gods. They are misshapen, ugly, and gray, living to a great age in their subterranean abode, often helpful, often mischievous or even malicious, in their dealings with men. See ALBERICH, ALVISS, ANDVARI, REGIN; cf. ELF.

Syn. — DWARF, PYGMY. DWARF frequently (though not necessarily) suggests stunted growth; PYGMY commonly carries no implication beyond that of diminutive size or insignificance; as, "His [the fool's] value was trebled in the eyes of the king by the fact of his being also a dwarf and a cripple" (Poe); a dwarf oak; cf. "Mr. Hyde was pale and dwarfish, he gave an impression of deformity without any namable malformation" (Stevenson); "To him all the men I ever knew were pygmies. > The poor man dwells in a humble cottage near the hall where the lord of the domain resides C. J. Smith.

Syn. — Inhabit, live, sojourn, stay, rest. See RESIDE.

to dwell in, to abide in (a place); hence, to depend on. "My hopes in heaven do dwell." Shak. — to d. on or upon, to continue long on or in; to remain absorbed with; to stick to; to make much of; as, to dwell upon a subject; a singer dwells on a note; they dwelt on his words.

dwell, n. 1. Act of dwelling; delay; pause; stay. Obs. or R., except of horses. See DWELL, v. i., 1.

2. Mech. A short intermission in the motion of a part of a machine, to give time for its own proper operation or for that of another part, as, in printing, a brief continuance of pressure while taking an impression.

dwell'er (-ẽr), n. One that dwells, esp. an inhabitant; a resident. "Dwellers at Jerusalem." Acts i. 19.

dwell'ing, n. Habitation; place or house in which a person lives, abode; residence; domicile.

> Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons. Jer. xlix. 33.

Syn. — See HABITATION.

dwelling house. A house occupied as a residence, in distinction from a store, office, or other building. At the common law (made to provide for ruder times) the dwelling house, as respects burglary, etc., may include associated or connected buildings within the same curtilage; but now, under the greater security of life and property, the tendency of the courts and legislation is to restrict the term to the dwelling house proper and buildings communicating with it directly or by an inclosed covered passage.

dwin'dle (dwĭn'd'l), v. i.; DWIN'DLED (-d'ld); DWIN'DLING (-dlĭng). [From ME. dwinen to languish, waste away, AS. dwînan; akin to LG. dwinen, D. dwijnen to vanish, Icel. dvîna to cease, dwindle, Sw. tvina; of uncertain origin. The suffix -le, preceded by d excrescent after n, is added to the root with a diminutive force.] To diminish; to become less; to shrink; to waste or consume away; to become degenerate; to fall away.

> Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shak.
> Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

Syn. — See DECREASE.

dwin'dle, v. t. To make less; to bring low.

dwin'dle, n. A dwindling; also, a dwindled object. Rare.

dwine (dwīn), v. i. & n.; DWINED (dwīnd); DWIN'ING (dwīn'ĭng). [See DWINDLE.] To waste away; to pine, or cause to pine; to languish. Archaic, Dial. Eng., or Scot.

dy'ad (dī'ăd), n. [L. dyas, dyadis, the number two, Gr. δυάς: cf. F. dyade. See TWO; cf. DUAD.] 1. Two units treated as one; a couple; a pair.

2. Chem. A dyad element, atom, or radical. See VALENCE.

3. Biol. One of the groups of two chromosomes formed by the division of a tetrad (which see); also, in morphology, a secondary unit formed of an aggregate of monads.

dy'ad, a. 1. Consisting of two; dyadic.

2. Chem. Having a valence of two. See VALENCE.

dy-ad'ic (dī-ăd'ĭk), a. [Gr. δυαδικός of or for two.] Pertaining to the number two; of two parts or elements; relating to a dyad, or involving two as its principle.

dyadic arithmetic. = BINARY ARITHMETIC.

dy-ad'ic, n. Math. a Dyadic or binary arithmetic. See BINARY ARITHMETIC. b A sum of dyads.

Dy'ak (dī'ăk), n. One of the aboriginal inhabitants of Borneo, a group of tribes of Malayan speech, but differing from the Malays in their greater stature, more Caucasic features, and lower civilization. They are divided into two great groups: the coastal tribes more or less mixed with Malay, Chinese, and Hindu immigrants, relatively sedentary and civilized; and the wild head-hunting tribes of the interior. They use the sumpitan, or blowgun, with poisoned arrows, and are skillful in the construction of bamboo dwellings and suspension bridges, and in metal working. Their native religion is animistic.

Dy'as (dī'ăs), n. [L. dyas the number two.] Geol. The Permian; — so called in Europe, where its rocks consist of two distinct series, as in Germany. — Dy-as'sic (dī-ăs'ĭk), a.

dye (dī), n. [AS. déah. See DYE, v.] 1. Color produced by dyeing.

2. Material used for dyeing; a dyestuff. Dyes are, for practical purposes, classed as follows: (1) acid dyes, as eosin, which dye wool and silk directly in an acid bath; (2) basic dyes, as fuchsine, which dye wool and silk directly, and cotton when mordanted with tannin; (3) direct cotton dyes, as the benzidine dyes; (4) mordant dyes, as alizarin, which require the use of mordants; (5) vat dyes, as indigo; (6) developing dyes, as aniline black, produced on the fiber; (7) lakes and mineral pigments, which are fixed on the fiber by albumin or other agglutinant. Natural dyestuffs, as madder and indigo, are of limited number and uncertain quality. Artificial dyes, introduced in 1856, and now numbering thousands, are as a class cheaper, more brilliant, and much more varied; they show all degrees of fastness. Comparatively few are poisonous. Some are identical with natural products (see ALIZARIN, INDIGO). The following table includes some of the more important artificial dyes.

TABLE OF DYES.

NOTE. — COLUMN I gives the commercial name of the dye. This usually indicates the dyeing property, chemical character, or the like. The letters added are sometimes arbitrary, but often indicate the tinge of the dye, as B for blue, R red, G (Ger. gelb) yellow.

COLUMN II gives: (in roman type) the class of chemical compounds to which the dye belongs or the source from which it is derived; (in italic type) the class as regards its application, whether acid, basic, or the like (see above).

COLUMN III gives the color of the dye as it occurs in bulk.

COLUMN IV gives: (in roman type) the principal uses of the dye (kind of goods, etc.); (in italic type) the color imparted to the goods.

ABBREVIATIONS used: ac = acid; bas = basic; brn = brown; c = cotton; devel = developing; dk = dark; fluoresc = fluorescent; grn = green; mord = mordant; oxyket = oxyketone; s = silk triphm = triphenylmethane; w = wool; yel = yellow.

dye (dī), v. t.; DYED (dīd); DYE'ING. [ME. deyen, dyen, AS. dēagian, fr. dēah a color, dye; perh. akin to L. fucus.]
1. To stain; to color; to give a new and permanent color to, esp. by impregnating the substance with a coloring agent, as in the use of dyestuffs.

> Cloths to be dyed of divers colors. Trench.
> The soul is dyed by its thoughts. Lubbock.

2. To impart (a given color) to a fabric or material by dyeing it; as, to dye a blue over a yellow.
to dye in (the) grain, to dye of a fast color by means of the coccus or kermes grain (see GRAIN, n. ,10); hence, to dye firmly; also, to dye in the wool. — to d. in the wool, fig., to dye firmly; to imbue thoroughly; as, a dyed-in-the-wool Tory.

dye, v. i. To take or impart color in dyeing.

dye'house' (-hous'), n. A building where dyeing is done.

dye'ing (dī'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of DYE. Specif.: n. Process or art of fixing coloring matters permanently and uniformly in the fibers of wool, cotton, silk, etc. Three theories as to the nature of this process have been proposed: the mechanical, which assumes that the dye is merely absorbed in the pores of the fiber; the chemical, according to which the dye and one or more constituents of the fiber form a compound; and the solid solution theory, which regards the fibers as solid solvents for the dyes.

dy'er's oak (dī'ẽrz). a The gall oak (Quercus infectoria), the galls of which yield a dye. b In the United States, the yellow oak (Q. velutina).

dyer's weed. a Any of several dye-yielding plants; as: the yellowweed (Reseda luteola); the dyeweed (Genista tinctoria); the dyer's woad. b In the United States, any of certain species of Solidago, esp. S. nemoralis and S. rugosa, the bright yellow flower heads of which are occasionally used in dyeing.

dyer's woad. A brassicaceous dye plant (Isatis tinctoria), which, with a related Chinese species, yields an indigo.

dye'weed' (-wēd'), n. a The woadwaxen. b A small cosmopolitan asteraceous herb (Eclipta alba).

dye'wood' (-wōōd'), n. Any wood, such as logwood, from which coloring matter is extracted for dyeing.

dy'go-gram (dī'gō-grăm), n. [dynamo-gonio-gram, i. e., force and angle diagram.] A curve showing the effect of the iron in a ship upon the compass needle for all positions of the vessel with reference to the magnetic meridian.

dy'ing (dī'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of DIE. Hence: p. a. 1. In the act of dying; destined to death; mortal, perishable; as, dying bodies.
2. [From the noun.] Of or pertaining to dying or death; as, dying bed; dying day; also, simulating a dying state.

Dying Gaul.

dying declaration, Law, a declaration made by a person in the immediate prospect of death, and having no hope of recovery; an ante-mortem statement. Such a declaration relating to the cause of death is admissible in a prosecution for homicide. — D. Gaul, or D. Gladiator, a marble statue of the Pergamene school in the Capitoline Museum at Rome, representing a fallen Gaul, dying from a spear wound.

dy'ing-ness, n. State of dying, or deathlike languor.

> Tenderness becomes me best, a sort of dyingness Congreve dyna-. [Gr δύναμις power; δύνασθαι to be able.] A prefix denoting power.

☞ In English words beginning with this prefix, the y, which is short in Greek, was formerly always marked by orthoëpists with its short sound (like i in pin), but the best usage now seems decidedly to favor the long sound (like i in pine), esp. in dynamic, dynamite, and the words derived from or allied to them. In dynasty, etc., usage is more evenly divided, the long sound being more usual in the United States, while in England, according to the Oxf. E. D., the short sound is preferred by most scholars.

dy'na-graph (dī'nă-grăf; dĭn'ă-), n. [dyna- + -graph.] Railroads. An apparatus or a collection of apparatus in a railroad car for exhibiting and recording the condition of a line of track and the resistance of a train, its speed, and other particulars concerning its running.

dy'name (dī'nām), n. [Gr. δύναμις power.] Mech. The resultant of all the forces acting on a body or system. It always reduces to a single force, or a force and a couple.

dy-nam'e-ter (dī-năm'ē-tẽr; dĭ-), n. [dyna- + -meter: cf. F. dynamètre. Cf. DYNAMOMETER.] Optics. An instrument for determining the magnifying power of telescopes, consisting usually of a double-image micrometer applied to the eye end of a telescope for measuring accurately the diameter of the image of the object glass there formed. This measurement, compared with the actual diameter of the glass, gives the magnifying power. — dy'na-met'ric (dī'nă-mĕt'rĭk; dĭn'ă-), dy'na-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl), a.

dy-nam'ic (dī-năm'ĭk; dĭ-) } a. [Gr. δυναμικός powerdy-nam'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl; see DYNA-) } ful, fr. δύναμις power, fr. δύνασθαι to be able; cf. L. durus hard, E. dure: cf. F. dynamique.] 1. Physics. a Of or pert. to power; pert. to physical forces or energy; as, the dynamic theory of heat. b Of or pert. to dynamics; of or pert. to forces producing motion, active; — opposed to static and potential.
2. Belonging to, or characterized by, energy or effective action; potent; forceful.
3. Pertaining to change or process (regarded as manifestation of energy or agency); involving or producing alteration; esp., viewing or designating psychical phenomena with reference to the grounds of their origin and manifestation, rather than in their presentational character.

> We pass to the dynamical point of view. At this stage, we have to investigate the general laws and conditions according to which change takes place in consciousness. G. F. Stout.

4. Econ. Having to do with disturbances of the equilibrium of economic forces, whether caused by the sudden introduction of exceptional conditions or by progressive change in the standards and habits of a people.
5. Phon. Pronounced with a breath impulse or with force, as a syllable. Hempl.
6. Med. Functional; as, a dynamic disease.
dynamic accent. Phon. = STRESS. — d. electricity, inspiration, etc. = DYNAMICAL ELECTRICITY, etc. — dynamical mean sun, Astron., an imaginary sun, or point, which, coinciding with the sun itself at perihelion, moves uniformly round the ecliptic once a year. — d. stability (of a ship for a given angle of inclination), the weight of the ship multiplied by the vertical separation of the centers of gravity and buoyancy of the ship at that angle. — d. theory of heat, the theory that assumes heat to be, not a kind of matter, but a mode of motion. — d. electricity. See ELECTRICITY. — d. geology. See GEOLOGY. — d. inspiration. Theol. See INSPIRATION, 2. — d. isomerism. See ISOMERIC. — d. metamorphism. Geol. See METAMORPHISM.

dy-nam'ic (dī-năm'ĭk; dĭ-; see DYNA-), n. 1. Dynamics.
2. A dynamic force; a motive power. "A dynamic to give vigor." W. Gladden.

dy-nam'ics (-ĭks), n. 1. That branch of mechanics which treats of the motion of bodies (kinematics) and the action of forces in producing or changing their motion (kinetics). Dynamics is held by some recent writers to include statics and not kinematics.
2. The moving moral, as well as physical, forces of any kind, or the laws which relate to them.
3. Music. That department of musical science which relates to, or treats of, the variation and contrast of loudness or power in tones.

dy'na-mism (dī'nă-mĭz'm; dĭn'ă-), n. [Cf. F. dynamisme. See DYNAMIC.] 1. Philos. Any theory which views the universe as essentially or immanently constituted by forces. The doctrine of Leibnitz that substance must be interpreted by the notions of molding and resistant forces, and the modern physical theory that energy is the ultimate physical reality, are examples.

2. The mode of being or the energizing operation of force or efficiency of any sort.

dy'na-mist (dī'nə-mĭst; dĭn'ə- ; see DYNA-), n. An adherent of dynamism.

dy'na-mite (dī'nə-mīt; dĭn'ə- ; 277 : see DYNA-), n. [Gr. δύναμις power. See DYNAMIC.] An explosive invented by Nobel in 1866, consisting of nitroglycerin absorbed in kieselguhr or other porous material. The dynamites may be subdivided into two groups: those having an inert absorbent such as kieselguhr, sawdust, or charcoal, and those containing some absorbent, usually a nitrate mixture, capable of taking part in the explosion. They are safer than nitroglycerin, being less liable to explosion from moderate shocks, or from spontaneous decomposition.

dy'na-mite, v. t.; DY'NA-MIT'ED (-mīt'ĕd); DY'NA-MIT'ING (-mīt'ĭng). 1. To charge with dynamite.

2. To blow up or shatter with dynamite.

dynamite gun. A pneumatic gun for shells containing high explosives. See PNEUMATIC GUN.

dy'na-mit'er (-mīt'ẽr), n. One who uses dynamite; esp., one who uses it, or advocates its use, for the anarchistic or other lawless destruction of life or property.

A dynamo consists essentially of a magnetic field, a conductor, and appliances for collecting the current produced by the relative motion of the conductor and the field. Usually the conductor, or armature, consisting of copper wire coiled about an iron core, revolves in the field produced by the field magnets. Either permanent magnets or electromagnets may be used; if the latter, the dynamo is said to be separately excited when the current for the field magnets comes from an outside source, and self-exciting when part of the current which it generates is used for that purpose. A machine with permanent magnets is, however, usually called a magneto, and is never made in large sizes. According to the manner of winding field magnets, self-excited dynamos are spoken of as series-wound, shunt-wound, and compound-wound, also as open-coil or closed-coil according to the winding of the armature. The current generated in the armature winding is alternating, and when an alternating current is desired it is conveyed to the line circuit by collector or slip rings and brushes. A commutator rectifies the current if a direct current is desired. See WINDING, GRAMME RING, MAGNETIC CIRCUIT.

[dynamo- + electric. See DYNAMIC.] Pertaining to the conversion, by induction, of mechanical energy into electrical energy, or vice versa. Dynamo-electric machines are called dynamo-electric generators, or simply dynamos, when an electric current is produced, and dynamo-electric motors, or simply motors, when a current is made to produce mechanical power. The same machine may be used either as a dynamo or as a motor.

dy'na-mo-gen'e-sis (dī'nə-mō-jĕn'ē-sĭs; dĭn'ə-), n. [dynamo- + -genesis.] Psychol. The fact or principle that changes in excitations of the senses result or reappear in changes in muscular tension or activity; — applied also to heightening of thought activity as a correlative of sense excitation. — dy'na-mo-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a.

dy'na-mog'e-ny (-mŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [dynamo- + -geny.] Psychol. An instance of dynamogenesis; dynamogenic action.

dy-nam'o-graph (dī-năm'ō-grăf; dĭ-), n. [dynamo- + -graph.] Physiol. A dynamometer to which is attached a device for automatically registering muscular power. — dy'na-mo-graph'ic (dī'nə-mō-grăf'ĭk; dĭn'ə-), a.

dy'na-mo-met'a-mor'phism (dī'nə-mō-mĕt'ə-môr'fĭz'm; dĭn'ə-), n. [dynamo- + metamorphism.] a Geol. Metamorphism in which mechanical energy, as exerted in pressure, is the principal agent; — contrasted with pyrometamorphism, hydrometamorphism. b Physics. Transformation of one form of energy into another. — dy'na-mo-met'a-mor'phic (-fĭk), a. — dy'na-mo-met'a-mor'phosed (-fōst), a. Geol. Altered by dynamometamorphism.

dy'na-mom'e-ter (dī'nə-mŏm'ĕ-tẽr; dĭn'ə-), n. [Cf. F. dynamomètre. See DYNAMETER.]

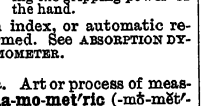
1. An apparatus for measuring force or power, esp. muscular effort of men or animals, or the power developed by a motor, or that required to operate machinery. It commonly embodies a spring to be compressed or weight to be sustained by the force applied, combined with an index, or automatic recorder, to show the work performed. See ABSORPTION DYNAMOMETER, TRANSMISSION DYNAMOMETER.



Dynamometer for measuring the gripping power of the hand.

2. = DYNAMETER.

dy'na-mom'e-try (-mŏm'ĕ-trĭ), n. Art or process of measuring forces doing work. — dy'na-mo-met'ric (-mō-mĕt'rĭk), dy'na-mo-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl), a.

dynamometric governor. See GOVERNOR, n., 5.

dy'na-mo-stat'ic (-mō-stăt'ĭk), a. [dynamo- + static.] Elec. Pert. to or designating a machine for producing static electricity by the use of a continuous or alternating current.

dy'na-mo'tor (dī'nə-mō'tẽr; dĭn'ə-), n. Elec. A special form of motor generator combining the motor and generator in a single machine with one field magnet and with two armatures (or with one armature upon which are two windings), one receiving current as a motor and the other generating current as a dynamo.

dy'nast (dī'năst; dĭn'ăst; see DYNA-), n. [L. dynastes, Gr. δυνάστης, fr. δύνασθαι to be able or strong: cf. F. dynaste. See DYNAMIC.] A ruler; a governor; a prince.

dy-nas'tic (dī-năs'tĭk; dĭ-), dy-nas'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl), a. [Gr. δυναστικός of a dynast, fr. δυνάστης: cf. F. dynastique.] Of or relating to a dynasty. — dy-nas'ti-cal-ly, adv.

Dy'nas-ti'næ (dī'năs-tī'nē ; dĭn'ăs-), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. δυνάστης lord, ruler.] Zoöl. A subfamily of lamellicorn beetles of the family Scarabæidæ, comprising some of the largest existing insects. The males are often armed with a large horn on the head (and sometimes one or more on the thorax), whence the term rhinoceros beetle is applied to members of the group. Dy-nas'tes (dī-năs'tēz ; dĭ-) is the typical genus, and includes two large species, D. tityrus and D. grantii, of the southern and western United States, respectively, as well as the Hercules beetle (which see).

dy'nas-ty (dī'năs-tĭ ; dĭn'ăs-tĭ ; 277 : see DYNA-), n. ; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Gr. δυναστεία lordship, fr. δυνάστης: cf. F. dynastie dynasty. See DYNAST.] 1. Sovereignty; lordship; dominion. Obs. or R.

2. A race or succession of kings, of the same line or family; the continued lordship of a race of rulers.

dyne (dīn), n. [Gr. δύναμις power: cf. F. dyne. See DYNAMIC.] Physics. The unit of force in the C. G. S. system of physical units; that is, the force which, acting on a gram for a second, imparts to it a velocity of a centimeter per second. It is approximately the force exerted by a milligram weight under the influence of gravity.

Dy-oph'y-site (dī-ŏf'ĭ-sīt), n. [Gr. δύο two + φύσις nature.] Eccl. Hist. One of those who maintain the existence of a dual nature, the divine and the human united, in the person of Christ, according to the decision of the fourth Ecumenical Council at Chalcedon (A. D. 451); — opposed to Monophysite. — Dy'o-phy-sit'ic (dī'ō-fĭ-sĭt'ĭk), Dy'o-phy-sit'ic-al (-ĭ-kăl), a. — Dy-oph'y-si-tism (dī-ŏf'ĭ-sĭ-tĭz'm ; -sī-tĭz'm), n.

Dy-oth'e-lete (dī-ŏth'ē-lēt), or Dy-oth'e-lite (-līt), n. [Gr. δύο two + θέλειν, ἐθέλειν, to will, be willing.] Eccl. Hist. One of those who maintain the doctrine of the two wills in Christ, the human and the divine; — opposed to Monothelete. — Dy'o-the-le'tian (dī'ō-thē-lē'shăn), Dy'o-the-let'ic (-lĕt'ĭk), Dy'o-the-let'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — Dy-oth'e-letism (dī-ŏth'ē-lē-tĭz'm), n. — Dy-oth'e-lism (-ē-lĭz'm), n.

dyp'none (dĭp'nōn), n. [di- + hypnone.] Chem. A crystalline substance, $C_{16}H_{14}O$, formed by the condensation of two molecules of acetophenone, or hypnone.

dys- (dĭs-). A prefix, from Greek δυς-, hard, ill, and signifying ill, bad, hard, difficult, and the like; cf. the prefixes, Skr. dus-, Goth. tuz-, OHG. zur-, G. zer-, AS. to-, Icel. tor-, Ir. do-.

dys'æs-the'si-a, dys'es-the'si-a (dĭs'ĕs-thē'sĭ-ə ; -zhĭ-ə), n. [NL. ; dys- + æsthesia.] Med. Impairment of any of the senses, esp. of touch. — dys'æs-thet'ic, dys'es-thet'ic (-thĕt'ĭk), a.

dys-al'bu-mose (dĭs-ăl'bū-mōs), n. [dys- + albumose.] Physiol. Chem. An alteration product of hetero-albumose, insoluble in salt solutions, but soluble in weak acids and alkalies. See HETERO-ALBUMOSE.

dys-ar'thri-a (dĭs-är'thrĭ-ə), n. [NL. See DYS-, ARTHRON.] Med. Difficult articulation of words, due to disease of the central nervous system. — dys-ar'thric (-thrĭk), a.

dys'ar-thro'sis (dĭs'är-thrō'sĭs), n. [NL. ; dys- + arthrosis.] Med. a Any morbid condition of a joint in which there is less than the normal power of motion, due to deformity, dislocation, or disease. b Dysarthria.

dys-chro'ma-top'si-a (dĭs-krō'mə-tŏp'sĭ-ə ; -shə), n. [NL. ; dys- + chromato- + -opsia.] Med. Imperfect vision as regards color; difficulty in distinguishing colors.

dys-cra'si-a (dĭs-krā'zhĭ-ə ; -zĭ-ə), n. [NL., fr. Gr. δυσκρασία ; δυς- bad + κρᾶσις mixture, fr. κεραννύναι to mix.] Med. An ill habit or state of the constitution; — formerly regarded as dependent on a morbid condition of the blood and humors. (See HUMOR.) — dys-cra'si-al (-zĭ-ăl), dys-cras'ic (-krăz'ĭk ; -krăs'ĭk), a.

dys'cra-site (dĭs'krə-sīt), n. [dys- + Gr. κρᾶσις compound.] A native compound of antimony and silver, of variable composition, usually massive and silver-white. H., 3.5–4. Sp. gr., 9.44–9.85.

dys'en-ter'ic (dĭs'ĕn-tĕr'ĭk) } a. [L. dysentericus, Gr.
dys'en-ter'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } δυσεντερικός.] Of or pertaining to dysentery; having dysentery; as, a dysenteric patient; dysenteric symptoms.

dys'en-ter-y (dĭs'ĕn-tĕr-ĭ), n. [L. dysenteria, Gr. δυσεντερία ; δυς- ill, bad + ἔντερον, pl. ἔντερα, intestines, akin to ἐντός within, ἐν in, E. in: cf. F. dysenterie. See DYS- ; IN.] Med. A disease attended with fever, inflammation, and ulceration of the large intestine, and characterized by griping pains, constant desire to evacuate the bowels, and the discharge of mucus and blood. It may be acute or chronic, sporadic or epidemic. When epidemic it is often malignant. Amœbic, or tropical, dysentery is caused by the presence of amœbæ in the intestinal canal. Bacillary, or Japanese, dysentery is due to the presence of a certain bacillus in the intestinal canal. Diphtheritic dysentery is characterized by the formation of a false membrane.

dys'i-dro'sis (dĭs'ĭ-drō'sĭs), n. [NL. ; dys- + Gr. ἱδρώς sweat.] Med. a An abnormal secretion of sweat. b A skin disease characterized by formation of deep-seated vesicles on the palms and soles; pompholyx.

E (ē). 1. The fifth letter of the English alphabet. It derives its form, name, and value from the Latin, the form and value being further derived from the Greek, into which it came from the Phœnician, and ultimately, perhaps, from the Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. Etymologically e is most closely related to i, a, and o, as illustrated by fall, fell ; man, men ; drink, drank, drench ; dint, dent ; doom, deem ; goose, geese ; beef, OF. boef, L. bos ; and E. cheer, OF. chiere, LL. cara. E has in English several sounds, the two principal being its "long" or name sound, as in eve, me, and the short, as in end, best. For its other values and functions see Guide to Pron., §§ 148–161.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate : a [cap. or l. c.] The fifth in a series ; fifth in order or class ; sometimes, the numeral 5 ; as, company E. b [cap.] Logic. The universal negative proposition (No A is B). c [cap.] Naut. The second-class Lloyds rating. d [l. c.] Math. (1) The base of the natural or Napierian system of logarithms. (2) Eccentricity (of a curve). e [l. c.] Dynam. The coefficient of restitution of elasticity. f Elec. In the form E or e, electromotive force ; voltage ; potential difference. g Chem. [cap.] Erbium. h Astron. [cap.] A prominent Fraunhofer line caused by iron. i [cap.] Mech. Modulus of elasticity (Young's modulus). j [l. c.] Mech. Strain per unit length. k Music. (1) The third tone of the model major scale (that in C), or the fifth tone in its relative minor scale (that in A minor). (2) In notation, any symbol representing this tone, as a note on a certain line or space of a staff. See CLEF, Illust. (3) On a keyboard, any key giving this tone. See KEYBOARD, Illust.

3. As a medieval Roman numeral, E stands for 250.

4. As an abbreviation : a In the form E. Various proper names, as Edward (in library cataloguing E :), Elizabeth (in library cataloguing E . .), Eugene, etc. ; Earl ; Earth ; Eastern (Postal District, London) ; Easter (Term) ; Edinburgh ; Elohist Prophetic Document, or its author, the earliest stratum being designated E^1, later strata E^2, and E^3 (O. T. Criticism) ; English. b In the form e. or E. : East : early ; emmetropia ; engineer ; errors (Baseball) ; engineering ; entrance (Theat.) ; export.

E flat (Eþ), the tone a half step below E. Named from their respective keynotes are · E flat major, E major, the major scales or keys having the signatures respectively of three flats and four sharps ; E flat minor, E minor, the minor scales or keys relative to G flat major and G major, and having the same signatures respectively of six flats and one sharp.

e-. A prefix meaning out, out of, from, etc. See EX-.

E'a (ā'ä), n. Assyrio-Babylon. Myth. A deity of the supreme triad in the theological system of the Babylonian priests, of which the other members were Anu and Bel. He is god of the watery element, giver of arts and sciences, healer of the sick, and according to one version creator of mankind. He was the chief deity of ancient Eridu, and was held to be the father of Marduk, the great god of Babylon. His consort is Damkina. Cf. CREATION EPIC.

each (ēch), a. or a. pron. [ME. eche, ælc, elc, ilk, AS. ælc ; ā always + gelīc like ; akin to OD. iegelijk, OHG. eogiwīh, MHG. iegelīch, G. jeglich. See 1st AYE, ALIKE ; cf. EVERY, ILK.] Every (individual of two or more, esp. of a definite number) considered separately from the rest. As now used each generally implies reference to a definite number or group of objects and emphasizes the consideration of them as individuals, every emphasizes the fact that all the individuals of a class or group are included, whether definite or indefinite in number ; as, "each side of a cube is equal to every other side." Each is often used pronominally, referring to a noun before or after it. Cf. EVERY.

> I know each lane and every alley green. Milton.
> In short, each man's happiness depends upon himself. Sterne.
> Then draw we nearer day by day,
> Each to his brethren, all to God. Keble

Syn. — See ALL, DISTRIBUTIVELY.

each other, a phrase used as a reciprocal pronoun in oblique cases ; as, we saw each other's faces ; they think of each other. Historically each in the phrase each other is in the nominative case, other in an oblique case. Each other is generally used of two ; one another of more than two.

> It is a bad thing that men should hate each other ; but it is far worse that they should contract the habit of cutting one another's throats without hatred. Macaulay ea'ger (ē'gĕr), a. [ME. egre sharp, sour, eager, F. aigre, fr. L. acer sharp, sour, spirited, zealous ; akin to Gr. ἄκρος highest, extreme, Skr. açra point. Cf. ACRID, EDGE.]

1. Sharp ; keen ; acid, sour ; — applied esp. to things or conditions affecting the taste or other senses or sensibilities, as medicines, unpleasant words, diseases, or cold. Obs.

> It is a nipping and an eager air. Shak.

2. Spirited or strenuous ; sharply contested, as a fight ; formerly, also, fierce or savage, as a person or an animal.

> Conceit and grief an eager combat fight. Shak.

3. Excited by desire in the pursuit of any object ; ardent to pursue, perform, or obtain ; keenly desirous ; hotly longing ; as, the hounds were eager in the chase.

4. Brittle ; inflexible ; not ductile. Obs.

> Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

Syn. — Earnest, ardent, vehement, hot, impetuous, fervent, intense, impassioned, zealous, forward.

ea'ger-ness, n. State of being eager ; ardor.

Syn. — Earnestness, impetuosity, impatience ; promptness, readiness, alertness ; ardor, fervor, fervency, warmth, vehemence ; passion. — EAGERNESS, ALACRITY, ZEAL, ENTHUSIASM. EAGERNESS (see etym. under EAGER) implies keenness, impatience, or ardency of desire ; ALACRITY (see PROMPT), cheerful readiness or promptness, esp. of action ; as, "The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often a hindrance to it" (Locke) ; "His [Southey's] eagerness admits of no doubt or delay" (Hazlitt) ; "We . . . shall be glad to hear that you have exchanged languor for alacrity" (Cowper) ; "a springy alacrity and vigor" (Hawthorne) ; "France, where alacrity of service counted for more than the service itself" (M. Hewlett). ZEAL (see etym.) adds to eagerness the implication of strong and active, sometimes passionate, devotion to the interests of a cause or person ; ENTHUSIASM (see etym.) implies exaltation and intensity, often extravagance, of feeling in behalf of such interests ; as, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up" (Ps. lxix. 9) ; "had I but served my God with half the zeal I served my king" (Shak.) ; "drunk with divine enthusiasm" (Shelley) ; "It [our faith in an author] may be propagated by the contagion of enthusiasm, and preached with all the fervor of proselytism" (L. Stephen) ; he gained the respect, but could not rouse the enthusiasm, of his followers. See ENTHUSIAST, FERVOR, CUPIDITY.

ea'gle (ē'g'l), n. [ME. egle, F. aigle, fr. L. aquila. Cf. AQUILINE.] 1. Any of various large diurnal birds of prey, noted for their strength, size, graceful figure, keenness of vision, and powers of flight. They are the members of several different genera of the family Falconidæ, the typical eagles constituting the genus Aquila, in which the legs are feathered to the toes. man and the other mammals the ear consists of three parts: the external ear, which includes the pinna or auricle (in some animals practically absent) and meatus or external opening; the middle ear, drum, or tympanum; and the internal ear, or labyrinth. The middle ear is a cavity connected by the Eustachian tube with the pharynx, separated from the opening of the external ear by the tympanic membrane, and containing a chain of three small bones, or ossicles, named malleus, incus, and stapes, which connect this membrane with the internal ear. The part of the internal ear where the fibers of the auditory nerve terminate is the membranous labyrinth, a complicated system of connected sacs and tubes filled with a fluid (the endolymph), and lodged in a cavity, called the bony labyrinth, in the petrous bone. The membranous labyrinth corresponds in general form to, but does not completely fill, the bony labyrinth, being partially suspended in a fluid (the perilymph). The bony labyrinth consists of a central cavity, the vestibule, into which three semicircular canals and the canal of the cochlea (which see) open. The vestibular portion of the membranous labyrinth consists of two sacs, the utriculus and sacculus, connected by a narrow tube; into the utriculus three membranous semicircular canals open, while the sacculus is connected with a spiral membranous tube in the cochlea containing the organ of Corti. By the help of the external ear the sonorous vibrations of the air are concentrated upon the tympanic membrane and set it vibrating; the chain of bones in the middle ear transmits these vibrations to the internal ear, where, wholly or chiefly through the cells in the organ of Corti, they stimulate the fibers of the auditory nerve. In vertebrates other than mammals the ear is simpler. The pinna is usually entirely absent; the cochlea is well developed only in birds. and the system of ossicles is simplified; while in classes below amphibians the structures of the internal ear only are developed and the middle and external parts are wanting. In all the vertebrates (except the lancelets, which have no ear) semicircular canals occur, though the cyclostomes have but one or two. Their function is supposed to be connected with bodily orientation, and is possibly not connected with audition. The membranous labyrinth develops from an ingrowth of the external ectoderm of the embryo. It commonly contains concretions called otoliths (see OTOLITH). In many invertebrates organs believed to be auditory are found in various parts of the body. They are especially well developed in many sound-producing insects, as locusts. A common form is that known as otocyst (which see).

An allied form (C. n. californicus) is found in western North America. — e. owl, an owl having earlike tufts of feathers, as the long-eared owl and short-eared owl. — e. pheasant, any of several pheasants of the genus Crossoptilon of eastern and central Asia, having tufts of white feathers behind the ears. — e. seal, any seal of the family Otariidæ, which comprises the sea lions and fur seals. They are characterized by the independence and mobility of the hind limbs (so that they are able to move with some facility on land), well-developed but small external ears, a comparatively long neck, and by having the nostrils at the tip of the snout. — e. vulture. See OTOGYPS.
ear index. The ratio of the transverse diameter of the pinna to the longitudinal diameter, usually expressed in hundredths of the latter.
ear'ing, n. [From 1st EAR.] Naut. a A line used to fasten the upper corners of a sail to the yard or gaff; — also called head earing. b A line for hauling the reef cringle to the yard; — also called reef earing. c A line fastening the corners of an awning to the rigging or stanchions.
earl (ûrl), n. [ME. eorl, erl, AS. eorl man, noble; akin to OS. erl boy, man, Icel. jarl nobleman, count. Cf JARL.] 1. The viceroy of one of the four great divisions of England (Wessex, Northumberland, Mercia, East Anglia) established by Canute; — sometimes called ealdorman. See ALDERMAN, 1; JARL. Obs. or Hist.
2. a = 4th COUNT. Obs. b In Great Britain, a nobleman ranking below a marquis, and above a viscount. The rank of earl corresponds to that of count (comte) in France, and graf in Germany. Hence the wife of an earl is still called countess. See 4th COUNT. The title in feudal times implied that its holder was hereditary ruler of a county. It now carries only noble rank without jurisdiction, so that in some cases its holder prefixes Earl simply to his own name without territorial designation; as, Earl Russell, Earl Percy. See CORONET, Illust.
ear'lap' (ēr'lăp'), n. 1. The lobe of the ear.
2. A cover for the ear. U. S. earl'dom (ûrl'dŭm), n. [AS. eorl-dōm; eorl man, noble + -dōm -dom.] The jurisdiction, territorial possessions, status, title, or dignity, of an earl earles, earls (ûrlz; ērlz), n. [Cf. ARLES, EARNEST pledge.] Earnest money. See ARLES. Obs. or Hist.
ear'let (ēr'lĕt), n. [ear + -let.] 1. An earring. Obs.
2. A small ear, as (formerly) an auricle of the heart, or (now) of a plant leaf.
Earl Marshal. The head of the College of Arms in England and the eighth of the great officers of state, a dignity now hereditary in the line of the dukes of Norfolk. In medieval times the office, then simply Marshal, was subsidiary, or in some things supplementary, to that of Constable. The Earl Marshal attends the sovereign at the opening and closing of Parliament, arranges the order of state processions, esp. for coronations, royal marriages and funerals, etc., and appoints kings of arms, heralds, pursuivants, etc. There were formerly Earl Marshals of Scotland and Ireland. See EARL MARISCHAL.
ear lobe. The lobe of the ear; specif., pl., the folds of bare skin below the ears of domestic fowls.
ear'lock' (ēr'lŏk'), n. [AS. ēar-locca.] A lock or curl of hair near the ear; a lovelock. See LOVELOCK.
ear'ly (ûr'lĭ), adv ; EAR'LI-ER (-lĭ-ẽr) ; EAR'LI-EST. [ME. erli, erliche, AS. ærlice ; ær sooner + -līce -ly. See ERE; -LY.] In a time or position near or comparatively near the beginning of a period or a series; in good season; betimes; as, early in the catalogue; early in life.

> Those that seek me early shall find me. Prov. viii. 17.

Syn. — EARLY, SOON, BETIMES. The words early and soon agree in implying reference to a given point of time. But that which happens EARLY precedes, that which happens SOON follows, the point of time which is referred to; as, come early (in advance of a set time); come soon (shortly after the present time); he arrived early; I called, and he soon appeared. In its more general use, early applies to that which has not yet reached a point far from the beginning of any division or period of time; as, "If you're waking call me early" (Tennyson); early in his career; early in the century. BETIMES (now somewhat bookish) has less specific reference to a given point of time; as, "Let me say 'amen' betimes, lest the Devil cross my prayer" (Shak.).
ear'ly (ûr'lĭ), a. [ME. earlich. See EARLY, adv.] 1. Coming near or comparatively near the beginning of a period or series; specif., occurring in, or belonging to, remote past time; ancient; primitive; as, an early style of art.

> The forms of its earlier manhood. Longfellow.
> The earliest poem he composed. J. C. Shairp.

2. Coming or occurring in advance of the usual or appointed time; in good season; prior in time; among or near the first; — opposed to late; as, the early bird; an early spring; early fruit.
early blight. A disease of the foliage of the potato plant caused by the parasitic fungus Macrosporium solani, only the conidial stage of which is known. b The fungus itself. — E. English. See ENGLISH, n., 2. — E. English architecture, the first of the pointed Gothic styles used in England, as from 1170 to about 1260. See ARCHITECTURE. — E. Rose, a well-known variety of potato.
ear'mark' (ēr'märk'), n. A mark of identification on the ear; esp., a cropping, slitting, or the like, of the ear of a domestic animal; hence, any mark of identification; a distinguishing mark.

> Flying, he [a slave] should be described by the rounding of his head, and his earmark Robinson (More's Utopia).
> A set of intellectual ideas . . . have no earmarks upon them, no tokens of a particular proprietor. Burrow.

ear'mark', v. t.; EAR'MARKED' (-märkt'); EAR'MARK'ING. To give an earmark to, as an animal; hence, to mark in a distinctive way.
ear'-mind'ed (ēr'mīn'dĕd), a. Having one's mental imagery predominantly auditory; recalling sensations of sound better than any other kind, or thinking most readily in sounds, as of words. See AUDILE. — ear'-mind'ed-ness, n.
earn (ûrn), v. t.; EARNED (ûrnd); EARN'ING. [AS. earnan; akin to OHG. arnōn to reap, aran harvest, G. ernte, Goth. asans harvest, asneis hireling, AS. esne, cf. Icel. önn working season, work.] 1. To merit or deserve, as by labor or service; to do that which entitles one to (a reward, whether the reward is received or not).

> The high repute
> Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton

2. To acquire by labor, service, or performance; to deserve and receive as compensation or wages; as, to earn a good living; to earn honors or laurels.

> I earn that [what] I eat. Shak.

Syn. — See OBTAIN.
ear'nest (ûr'nĕst; 151), n. [Probably corrupted fr. F. arrhes, L. arra, arrha, arrhabo, Gr. ἀρραβών, of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. ērāvōn. Cf. ARLES, EARLES.] 1. Law. Something of value given by a buyer to a seller, to bind the bargain. By early Germanic law, and until the 13th century, an earnest was a distinct payment for the seller's forbearance to sell or deliver the thing to any one else than the giver of the earnest, whom it left free to withdraw by forfeiting the payment, while the seller was free to default upon repaying a sum double the amount, or by some laws more. The buyer's right was equivalent to a modern option with liquidated damages. With this meaning earnest is essentially equivalent to, and is often used to translate, the Roman law term arrha. Among merchants the payment of this earnest early lost its old character and became a form that bound both buyer and seller in a contract of sale. Formerly it was expended in connection with various religious offerings, and became known as the God's penny, and the contract was thus given religious sanction. Edward I proclaimed that the God's penny bound the contract of sale, and this rule passed into the common law.
2. Something given beforehand as a pledge; a token of what is to come; handsel.
Syn. — EARNEST, PLEDGE are here compared in their fig. uses An EARNEST gives assurance, or establishes a strong probability, of something more to come, usually of the same kind; a PLEDGE (the stronger term) affords security, frequently for something which is quite different; as, "that holy Spirit . . . which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 13, 14); "It seemed to him a sort of earnest that Providence intended his rescue from worse consequences" (G. Eliot); "Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection" (Shak.); "whether she be . . a Spirit for one day given, a pledge of grace from purest heaven" (Wordsworth). See PROMISE.
ear'nest, n. [AS. eornost, eornest; akin to OHG. ernust, G. ernst; cf. Icel. orrosta battle.] 1. An aroused and intent mental state; specif.: a Grave and intense attention, interest, or purpose; seriousness; as, to be in earnest; to speak with good earnest; — now commonly contrasted with jest, formerly with game.

> The note ernest is al over-blowe. Chaucer.

2. A matter or expression characterized by earnest; as, to speak earnest. Archaic.
ear'nest, a. 1. Characterized by, or proceeding from, an intense and serious state of mind; gravely or ardently intent; not light, flippant, playful, or jesting; as, earnest attention; an earnest tone or plea; an earnest person.

> An earnest advocate to plead for him. Shak.

2. Of a grave or important nature; not trivial.

> Life is real, life is earnest. Longfellow.

Syn. — Eager, zealous, ardent, sincere, hearty; staid, sedate, thoughtful; somber, awful, august. — EARNEST, SERIOUS, SOBER, GRAVE, SOLEMN. EARNEST implies tempered or restrained eagerness (see EAGERNESS); it always connotes sincerity; as, an earnest preacher, earnest prayers. SERIOUS (opposed to jocose, sportive) implies an appearance of (sometimes troubled) thought or reflection; SOBER (opposed to gay, volatile), staidness, or the absence of exhilaration; GRAVE (opposed to vivacious, hilarious), sobriety which became obsolete upon the attainder of Keith, the hereditary holder of the office, in 1716. Originally simply Marischal.

earth (ûrth), n. [From EAR to plow.] A plowing; also, a furrow or plowed field. Dial. Eng. or Hist.

earth, n. [AS. eorðe; akin to OS. ertha, OFries irthe, D. aarde, OHG. erda, G. erde, Icel. jorð, Sw. & Dan. jord, Goth. airþa, OHG. ero, Gr. ἐραζε, adv., to earth, and perh. to E. ear to plow.] 1. The globe or planet which we inhabit, the fifth in order of size and third in order of distance from the sun. Astronomical symbol, ⊖, or ⊕. The earth, anciently believed to be a plain, has long been known to be a globe from many proofs, as, e. g., the circular shadow which it always casts in an eclipse of the moon. Accurate measurements show it to be flattened at the poles, the polar diameter being only 7,900 miles, as compared with a diameter of 7,926 miles at the equator. The recognition that the earth rotates, making our night and day, and revolves about the sun, making our year, marked the change from the Ptolemaic system to the Copernican system. The earth's orbit about the sun is elliptical, but differs so little from a circle that the total heat received is practically uniform; the distribution of this heat over the earth varies, however, on account of the inclination of the earth's axis to the plane of the ecliptic (at an angle of 66° 33'), causing the seasons. Little is certainly known about the interior of the earth, but it must be very dense, since the earth's density as a whole is about 5.6 (that of water being unity), and also very hot, since the temperature increases regularly (as far as man has been able to penetrate), at a mean rate of about 1° F. for every 53 feet. The earth as a whole must be regarded as a rigid solid, and not as a liquid body enveloped in a thin crust, though probably part of the interior is kept solid only by the enormous pressure of the overlying material. See GEOGRAPHY, GEOLOGY, etc.

2. The world of land and sea; esp., this world as the dwelling place of man, in distinction from heaven and hell, as the dwelling places of spirits.

3. The land; land areas, as distinguished from the sea; also, land considered as a mere solid surface or ground, hence, the solid materials which make up the globe, in distinction from the air or water.

God called the dry land earth. Gen i. 10

He is pure air and fire, and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him. Shak

4. The softer matter composing part of the surface of the globe, in distinction from the firm rock; soil.

Give him a little earth for charity. Shak.

5. A part of this globe; a country; land. Obs. or R.

Would I had never trod this English earth Shak.

6. Worldly things, as opposed to spiritual things; the pursuits, interests, and allurements of this life.

Our weary souls by earth beguiled. Keble

7. The people on the globe.

The whole earth was of one language. Gen xi 1.

8. The covert or lair of a burrowing animal.

9. Chem. Any of several difficultly reducible metallic oxides, as alumina, zirconia, yttria, formerly classed as elements. See ALKALINE EARTHS. The rare earths include scandia, yttria, zirconia, lanthana, ceria, samaria, gadolinia, terbia, erbia, thulia, ytterbia, thoria, etc.

10. Elec. = GROUND.

Syn. — EARTH, WORLD. EARTH commonly refers to the globe in its planetary relations, or as contrasted with heaven or hell; WORLD usually suggests the sum of human concerns and interests; as, "this goodly frame, the earth" (Shak.); "O brave new world, that has such people in 't!" (id.); "I saw a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. xxi. 1); "The Devil . . . showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them" (Matt. iv. 8); the greatest on earth, in the world. See EARTHLY.

on earth, an intensive expression, oftenest used in questions and exclamations; as, What on earth shall I do? Nothing on earth will satisfy him. Colloq.

Whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. Phil. iii. 19.

2. Of all things on earth; possible; conceivable.

What earthly benefit can be the result? Pope.

3. Made of earth; earthy. Obs.

Syn. — EARTHLY, TERRESTRIAL, MUNDANE, WORLDLY, SECULAR, TEMPORAL. EARTHLY (opposed to heavenly) is the more homely and general, TERRESTRIAL (opposed to celestial; see CELESTIAL), the more formal and sonorous, term; as, "If I have told you earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things" (John iii. 12), "There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another" (1 Cor. xv. 40); "a peace above all earthly dignities, a still and quiet conscience" (Shak.); "when from under this terrestrial ball he fires the proud tops of the eastern pines" (Shak.); earthly desires, a terrestrial globe. MUNDANE frequently connotes the transitoriness, WORLDLY (under the influence of the N. T. sense of "world"), the pomp and vanity, of earthly things; as, mundane glory; "the volatility of mundane things" (Lathrop); "Mr. Worldly Wiseman" (Bunyan); worldly amusements. SECULAR is opposed to sacred, ecclesiastical; TEMPORAL (see TEMPORARY), to eternal, spiritual; as, the secular press, secular employments; "His scepter shows the force of temporal power" (Shak.); lords temporal (cf. lords spiritual). See EARTH.

earth pitch. Min. Mineral tar, a kind of asphalt.

earth'quake' (-kwāk'), n. A shaking or trembling of the earth's surface, due chiefly to the faulting of the rocks, but also to volcanic explosions, and perhaps to other subterranean disturbances. The earthquake shock spreads from the center of disturbance as a wave, which sometimes traverses great areas. Very feeble movements of the same sort are earth tremors. Many earthquakes and earth tremors are recorded daily, though but few are sensible, and very few destructive. Earthquakes are more frequent in volcanic districts, and especially along the boundary between great elevations and depressions, but they are by no means confined to such areas. The border of the Pacific Ocean in both hemispheres (including Japan, China, the region about San Francisco, and the South American countries), the Mediterranean region (especially Italy and the islands), the West Indies, Central America, the Hawaiian Islands, India, Persia, and Asia Minor are especially subject to them. Among the more notable earthquakes are: earth'worm' (-wûrm'), n. 1. Any of numerous oligochætous worms of the genus Lumbricus and many allied genera, Common Earthworm (Lumbricus terrestris). (¼) found in damp soil. They have a cylindrical body, tapering at each end, and consisting of numerous segments, which are without appendages, though they bear minute bristles. Earthworms are hermaphroditic and oviparous, and undergo no metamorphosis. They feed by swallowing earth and digesting out the nutritive matter, what remains being deposited on the surface of the ground near the opening of their burrow. They are thus useful in loosening and bringing the deeper parts of the soil to the surface. On account of their use for bait in fishing, they are often called angleworms. One of the largest and most abundant species in Europe and America is L. terrestris.

PLACE	DATE	EFFECTS OR CONSEQUENCES
Sicily	1693	Est. 60,000 lives lost

2. A mean, sordid person; a niggard.

earth'y (ûr'thĭ), a. 1. Consisting of, or resembling, earth; terrene; earthlike, as, earthy matter.

ear trumpet. A trumpet-shaped instrument for collecting and intensifying sounds to aid a person of defective hearing.

ear'wig' (ēr'wĭg'), n. [AS. ǽrwicga; ǽare ear + wicga beetle, worm: cf. E. dial. errı-wiggle.] 1. Any of numerous insects constituting the family Forficulidæ, a group formerly included in the cursorial Orthoptera, but now often regarded as forming a separate order, Euplexoptera, syn. Dermaptera. They have slender, many-jointed antennæ, and resemble the rove beetles in form, but have a pair of large forcepslike appendages at the end of the body, the use of which is unknown. When wings are present the fore wings are modified into elytra. The larvæ are very similar to the adults. In America the term is also applied to small chilopodous myriapods, as those of the genus Geophilus. Both insects are so called from the supposition that they creep into the human ear. They are, however, perfectly harmless.

Earwig (Spongophora pinnicauda). Enlarged.

ear'wig' v. t.; EAR'WIGGED' (-wĭgd'); EAR'WIG'GING (-wĭg'gĭng). 1. To influence, or attempt to influence, by insinuations or private talk.

India Company, a company organized in England for trade in India, and first chartered by Elizabeth (Dec. 31, 1600) under the title of "Governor and Company of Merchants of London Trading with the East Indies." It continued essentially a trading company till about 1765, when it was given territorial sovereignty of India, jointly with the crown. In 1698 a rival, called the New or English Company, as distinguished from the Old or London Company, was chartered under the title "The English Company Trading to the East Indies." In 1702 the two were combined under the name of "The United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies;" and the old company surrendered its charter in 1709. The Company was deprived of its governing powers in 1858, and it was dissolved in 1873 by 36 Vict. c. 17, as of Jan. 1, 1874. Similar companies were chartered by other European nations, of which the Dutch company lasted from 1602 to 1795, the French from 1664 to 1770, and the Danish from 1729 to 1801. — E. East'er (ēs'tẽr), n. [AS. ēaster, ēastron, pl., paschal feast, Easter; akin to G. ostern; fr. AS. Ēastre, a goddess of light or spring, in honor of whom a festival was celebrated in April; whence this month was called in AS. Eastermōnaδ. From the root of E. east. See EAST.] 1. An annual church festival commemorating Christ's resurrection, occurring on Sunday, the second day after Good Friday, and corresponding to the Passover, or Pasch, of the Jews; also, the day of this festival. In accord with the decree of the Council of Nice, Easter Day is always the first Sunday after the full moon that falls on or next after the 21st of March; if the full moon happens on Sunday, Easter is celebrated one week later. The date of the full moon is ascertained according to certain calendar rules, and may differ from that of the actual (astronomical) full moon. These rules include as preliminaries the finding of the golden number, epact, and dominical letter. These data, and the dates of Easter for the years 1900–1925, are:

Eastern cadets. See CADET, 2 b. — E. Church, or Orthodox E. Church, that portion of the Christian church which prevails in the countries once comprised in the Eastern Roman Empire and the countries converted to Christianity by missionaries from them. Its full official title is The Holy Orthodox Catholic Apostolic Eastern Church. It became estranged from the Western, or Roman, Church over the question of papal supremacy and the doctrine of the filioque, and a separation, begun in the latter part of the 9th century, became final in 1054. The Eastern Church consists of twelve (thirteen if the Bulgarian Church be included) mutually independent churches, using the vernacular (or some ancient form of it) in divine service and varying in many points of detail, but standing in full communion with each other and united as equals in a great federation. The highest five authorities are the patriarch of Constantinople, or ecumenical patriarch (whose position is not one of supremacy, but of precedence), the patriarch of Alexandria, the patriarch of Jerusalem, the patriarch of Antioch, and the Holy Synod of Russia. The Eastern Church accepts the first seven ecumenical councils (and is hence styled only schismatic, not heretical, by the Roman Catholic Church), has as its creed the Niceno-Constantinopolitan (without the later addition of the filioque, which, with the doctrine it represents, this church decisively rejects), baptizes infants with trine immersion, makes confirmation follow immediately upon baptism, administers the Communion in both kinds (using leavened bread) and to infants as well as adults, permits its secular clergy to marry before ordination and to keep their wives afterward but not to marry a second time, selects its bishops from the monastic clergy only, recognizes the offices of bishop, priest, and deacon as the three necessary degrees of orders, venerates relics and icons, and has an elaborate ritual. The independent churches which make up the Eastern Church are: (1) the Patriarchate of Constantinople, or New Rome, which extends over Turkey in Europe, most of Asia Minor, and the Turkish islands of the Ægean; (2) the Patriarchate of Alexandria, consisting of Egypt and its dependencies; (3) the Patriarchate of Antioch, including Cilicia, Syria (except Palestine), and Mesopotamia; (4) the Patriarchate of Jerusalem, comprising Palestine only; (5) the Church of Cyprus, consisting of the Eastern Christians in that island; (6) the Church of Mt. Sinai (which see); (7) the Hellenic Church, or Church of Greece, established in that country and autocephalous; (8) the Servian Church, the autocephalous established church of Servia; (9) the Roumanian Church, the autocephalous church of Roumania; (10) the Church of Montenegro, which is also autocephalous; (11) the Orthodox Church in Austria-Hungary, really consisting of the three independent sections, the Servians of Hungary and Croatia, the Roumanians of Transylvania, and the Ruthenians of Bukowina; (12) the Russian Church (which see); and (13) the Bulgarian Church (which see). — E. Hemisphere. See HEMISPHERE, 2. — E. Hindi. See HINDI. — E. Question, the problem of international politics arising from the instability caused by the relations of the Mohammedan power of the Porte with its Christian subjects and with the other nations of Europe, and from Russia's need of a southern seaport; also, that arising from the instability of affairs in the far East due to Russia's aggression and the uncertain future action of the Mongolian races and the European powers there. — E. eb'on-ite (-īt), n. A black variety of hard rubber, capable of being cut and polished, and used for many small articles, as combs and buttons, and for insulating material in electric apparatus; vulcanite. According to some authorities ebonite and vulcanite differ in the percentages of sulphur which they contain; others class ebonite as a variety of vulcanite.

eb'on-ize (-īz), v. t.; EB'ON-IZED (-īzd); EB'ON-IZ'ING (-īz'-ĭng). To make black, or stain black, in imitation of ebony; as, to ebonize wood.

eb'on-y (ĕb'ŭn-ĭ), n.; pl. EBONIES (-ĭz). [L. ebenus, fr. Gr. ἔβενος; prob. of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. hobnīm, pl.; cf. F. ébène. Perh. orig. an adj. fr. ebon.] 1. A hard, heavy, and durable wood, yielded by various species of Diospyros in tropical Asia and Africa; also, any tree from which this wood is obtained. Ebony exhibits great variation in color, but the most highly prized is black, and is susceptible of a fine polish; it is used in cabinetwork, in the manufacture of instruments, and as a veneer for other woods. The ebony of Bombay and Ceylon is derived from D. ebenum, D. ebenaster, D. peregrina, and other species; of Mauritius, from D. tessellaria; of Zanzibar, from D. mespiliformis; of the Philippines, from D. dendo, D. melanoxylon, and D. philippensis. Some varieties are white or red.
2. Any of several other trees yielding wood resembling ebony, as the green ebony (which see).

Ec-bal'li-um (ĕk-băl'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐκβάλλειν. See ECBOLE.] Bot. A genus of cucurbitaceous plants consisting of the single species E. elaterium, the squirting cucumber. Its fruit, when ripe, bursts from the peduncle, violently ejecting its seeds through the opening thus made. Elaterium is prepared from its mucilaginous pulp.

ec'bo-le (ĕk'bō-lē), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐκβολή a throwing out, a digression, fr. ἐκβάλλειν to throw out; ἐκ out of + βάλλειν to throw.] Rhet. A digression in which a person is introduced speaking his own words.

ec-bol'ic (ĕk-bŏl'ĭk), a. [See ECBOLE.] Med. Tending to produce uterine contractions which facilitate delivery or cause abortion. — n. An ecbolic drug, as ergot.

‖ ec'ce ho'mo (hō'mō). [L.] Behold the man; — Latin version of the words used by Pilate in presenting Christ wearing the crown of thorns to the Jews (John xix. 5), taken as a title for many pictures, etc., representing Christ crowned with thorns; hence, a picture or sculpture of this.

ec-cen'tric (ĕk-sĕn'trĭk), a. [F. excentrique, formerly also spelled eccentrique, fr. LL. eccentricus out of the center, eccentric, Gr. ἔκκεντρος; ἐκ out of + κέντρον center. See EX-, CENTER, cf. EXCENTRAL.] 1. Not having the same center; — said of circles, ellipses, spheres, etc., which, though coinciding, either in whole or in part, as to area or volume, have not the same center; — opposed to concentric.

2. Deviating or departing from the center, or from the line of a circle; as, an eccentric or elliptical orbit; pert. to deviation from the center or from true circular motion.

3. Deviating from stated methods, usual practice, or established forms or laws; deviating from an appointed sphere or way; departing from the usual course; irregular; anomalous; odd; as, eccentric conduct. "This brave and eccentric young man." Macaulay.

4. Not coincident as to motive or end. Obs. or R.

5. Of or pertaining to an eccentric; driven by an eccentric; as, an eccentric strap; an eccentric rod.

6. Forestry. Having an irregular or unsymmetrical trunk.

Syn. — Irregular, anomalous, singular, odd, peculiar, erratic, idiosyncratic, whimsical. See STRANGE.

eccentric anomaly. Astron. See ANOMALY a (1). — e. arbor, Mach., a kind of mandrel in a watchmaker's lathe having a split end for use as a chuck and fixed to a faceplate by a disk. — e. chuck. See CHUCK, n., 4. — e. equation. = EQUATION OF THE CENTER. — e. equator. = EQUANT, n.

ec-cen'tric, n. 1. A circle not having the same center as another contained in some measure within it.

2. One that deviates from regularity; an anomalous or irregular person or thing.

3. Astron. a In the Ptolemaic system, the supposed circular orbit of a planet about the earth (or sun), but with the earth (or sun) not in its center. b A circle described about the center of an elliptical orbit, with half the major axis for its radius.

4. Mach. A device consisting of a disk, usually lightened, through which a shaft is keyed eccentrically, and a circular strap which works freely round the rim of the disk for communicating its motion to one end of a rod the other end of which is constrained to move in a straight line so as to produce reciprocating motion. The eccentric is kinematically equivalent to a crank, its effective radius or throw, called its eccentricity, being the distance between the disk center and the center of the shaft with which it revolves.

One form of Eccentric, 4. A Eccentric Disk with material cut out for sake of lightness; B Hole for Crank Shaft; C C Eccentric Strap; D D Holes for bolts to unite the two halves of Strap; E Lubricator; F Eccentric Rod.

eccentric theory, Astron., the theory of the apparent solar motion in which the epicycle is replaced by an eccentric.

ec'cen-tric'i-ty (ĕk'sĕn-trĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Cf. F. excentricité.] 1. State of being eccentric; deviation from customary conduct; oddity.

2. Math. The ratio of the distances from any point of a conic to a focus and the corresponding directrix, — in the ellipse, < 1; in the hyperbola, > 1; in the parabola, = 1; in the circle, = 0. In the first two it equals the ratio of the distance between the foci to the transverse axis. The orbit of the earth is an ellipse having an eccentricity of about $\frac{1}{60}$, which is very slowly diminishing.

3. Mech. The distance of the center of figure of a body from an axis about which it turns; throw. See ECCENTRIC, n.

Syn. — Peculiarity, oddity, aberration, idiocracy. — ECCENTRICITY, IDIOSYNCRASY. ECCENTRICITY (see STRANGE) emphasizes the idea of divergence from the usual or customary; IDIOSYNCRASY (properly one's own peculiar temperament or bent), that of the personal, characteristic, and individual, esp. in trait, trick, or habit; as, "Jennie's eccentricity, her possibly uncanny deviation from the ordinary ways of life" (Mary Wilkins).

This decided love of the slope, or bank above the wall, rather than below it, is one of Turner's most marked idiosyncrasies, and gives a character to his composition. Ruskin

2. A remarkable mammal of the group Monotremata found in Australia, Tasmania, and New Guinea; — called also porcupine anteater. It is somewhat larger than a hedgehog; the hair of the skin is mingled with spines on the upper part of the body, the snout is long and tapering, and the mouth wholly toothless. It lives in burrows, is nocturnal, feeds largely on ants, and, like the true anteaters, has strong claws, very large salivary glands, and a long extensile tongue. Its egg is said to be about three quarters of an inch in diameter, with a leathery shell, and to be placed as soon as laid in the mammary pouch of the mother. There appears to be but one existing species of true echidna (Tachyglossus aculeatus, syn. Echidna aculeata). In New Guinea a closely related genus, Zaglossus, syn. Proëchidna, occurs, having usually but three claws on each foot instead of five.

Echidna (Tachyglossus aculeatus).

3. [cap.] Zoöl. a Syn. of TACHYGLOSSUS. b Syn. of BITIS.

or cylindrical, strongly ribbed, and usually very spiny cacti, extending from the southwestern United States to Brazil. The flowers range in color from white to yellow and red. Many species are in cultivation. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus.

e-chi'no-ce're-us (ĕ-kī'nō-sē'rē-ŭs; ĕk'Ī-nō-), n. [NL.; echino- + Cereus.] Bot. A genus of cacti closely related to Cereus and containing about 30 species, most of which are in cultivation. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus.

e-chi'no-coc-co'sis (-kŏ-kō'sĭs), n. [NL.; echinococcus + -osis.] Med. A parasitic disease affecting usually the liver and caused by the echinococcus; — called also hydatid disease.

Echinococcus. A Adult worm from dog; a Female Orifice; oo Oviducts; c Male Organ; B Cluster of Secondary Cysts; C Small Cyst enlarged to show the contained Heads or Scoleces; D Scolex becoming a Cyst, with a new Scolex b developing.

e-chi'no-cus (-kŏk'ŭs), n.; pl. -COCCI (-sī). [NL.; echino- + Gr. κόκκος seed.] Zoöl. The cystic larval stage of a small tapeworm (Tænia echinococcus). The adult infests the intestine of the dog; the larva develops in various tissues of cattle, sheep, swine, and man, being a most dangerous and often fatal parasite. The cyst, or hydatid, formed by the larva becomes very large, and secondary cysts develop within it, from the walls of which numerous tapeworm heads or scoleces grow. These, if eaten by a dog, may develop into adult worms.

e-chi'no-chrome (ĕ-kī'nō-krōm; ĕk'Ī-nō-krōm'), n. [echino- + Gr. χρῶμα color.] Physiol. Chem. A respiratory pigment, usually brown in color, found in certain echinoderms.

e-chi'no-derm (-dûrm), n. One of the Echinodermata — a. Of or pert. to the Echinodermata.

E-chi'no-der'ma-ta (-dûr'mă-tă), n. pl. [NL.; echino- + Gr. δέρμα, -ατος, skin.] Zoöl. A phylum of exclusively marine animals consisting of the starfishes, sea urchins, and their allies. They have radial (usually pentamerous) symmetry, together with more or less well-marked bilateral symmetry, and a calcareous exoskeleton, which often forms a more or less complete and rigid shell. They constitute one of the most ancient and distinctly characterized phyla of the animal kingdom and appear to have no near allies. There are a cœlom, a blood-vascular system, a nervous system, and a system of vessels containing a watery fluid, known as the water-vascular system, which is peculiar to this phylum. Small tubular appendages of the body connecting with these vessels are often present, serving in some cases as tentacles, in others forming organs of locomotion called tube feet. Other characteristic organs are the pedicellariæ (which see). The sexes are usually distinct; and there is commonly a bilaterally symmetrical larval stage. For the classes see ANIMAL; cf. ELEUTHEROZOA, PELMATOZOA.

e-chi'noid (ĕ-kī'noid; ĕk'Ī-noid), a. [echino- + -oid.] Zoöl. Like, or pert. to, a sea urchin. — n. A sea urchin.

Ech'i-noi'de-a (ĕk'Ī-noi'dē-ă), n. pl. [NL. See ECHINOID.] Zoöl. The class of echinoderms which consists of the sea urchins. They have an unattached, somewhat globular, heart-shaped or disk-shaped body, inclosed in a shell formed of more or less regular and usually firmly and rigidly united plates, studded with tubercles bearing spines. The spines are usually movable by muscles attached to their base, and serve for locomotion as well as for defense. The body also bears pedicellariæ and tube feet. Except in the Spatangoidea, the mouth has a complicated system of jaws called Aristotle's lantern (which see). The larva is a free-swimming pluteus. The class is commonly divided into the orders Palæechinoidea, Regularia, Clypeastridea, and Spatangoidea.

E-chi'no-pa'nax (ĕ-kī'nō-pā'năks; ĕk'Ī-nō-), n. [NL.; echino- + Gr. πάναξ a healing herb.] Bot. A genus of araliaceous plants sometimes included in Fatsia. The only species, E. horridus, is a prickly shrub often forming dense thickets in northwestern North America.

E-chi'nops (ĕ-kī'nŏps), n. [NL.; echino- + Gr. ὤψ face.] Bot. A large genus of asteraceous plants, the globe thistles, natives of the Mediterranean. They are herbs of thistlelike appearance with 1-flowered heads aggregated in a dense globular cluster. A few species are cultivated for ornament. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

E-chi'no-rhyn'chus (ĕ-kī'nō-rĭŋ'kŭs; ĕk'Ī-nō-), n. [NL.; echino + Gr. ῥύγχος snout.] Zoöl. A genus of acanthocephalan worms. The species are parasitic in the intestines of various vertebrates.

e-chi'nus (ĕ-kī'nŭs), n.; pl. ECHINI (-nī). [L., a hedgehog, sea urchin, Gr. ἐχῖνος.] 1. A hedgehog.

2 a A sea urchin. b [cap.] Zoöl. A genus of typical sea urchins, of the order Regularia, now restricted to the common edible species (E. esculenta) of the Mediterranean, and certain closely allied species, but in old classifications including most or all of the sea urchins. See ECHINOIDEA.

3. Arch. a The rounded molding forming the bell of the capital in the Greek Doric order, where it has in profile a peculiar elastic curve; hence, a similar member in other orders, that of the Ionic being carved with the egg-and-dart ornament. The name possibly alludes to the shape of the shell of the sea urchin. b Sometimes (by some considered inaccurate usage): (1) The quarter round or ovolo molding. (2) The egg-and-dart ornament.

E-chi'tes (ĕ-kī'tēz), n. [NL., fr. L. echite a kind of plant, perh a clematis.] Bot. A large genus of apocynaceous twining herbs, chiefly of tropical America. They have showy, umbellate flowers, with a 5-lobed disk and glandular calyx. Several species are cultivated. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus.

Ech'i-um (ĕk'Ī-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἔχιον name of a European species, fr. ἔχις viper.] Bot. A large genus of European boraginaceous plants having rather large irregular blue or white flowers with exserted stamens. The blueweed, or viper's bugloss (E. vulgare), is a troublesome weed in the eastern United States. Several of the shrubby species are cultivated. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

ech'o (ĕk'ō), n.; pl. ECHOES (-ōz). [L. echo, Gr. ἠχώ echo, sound, akin to ἠχή, ἦχος, sound, noise. cf. F. écho.]

1. Repetition of a sound caused by the reflection of the sound waves.

2. [cap.] The personification of this phenomenon or its cause; esp., Gr. Myth., a nymph, the daughter of Air and Earth, who, for love of Narcissus, pined away until nothing was left of her but her voice.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen. Milton.

3. Music. a A soft, echolike repetition of a phrase. b An echo organ or echo stop.

5. Response, esp. as implying sympathetic appreciation.

Many kind ... speeches found an echo in his heart. Stevenson

6. Versification. A line consisting of one or more syllables rimıng with the last syllable of the preceding line.

7. Whist. a A signal, played in the same manner as a trump signal, made by a player who holds four or more trumps (or as played by some exactly three trumps) and whose partner has led trumps or signaled for trumps. b A signal showing the number held of a plain suit when a high card in that suit is led by one's partner.

ech'o (ĕk'ō), v. t ; ECH'OED (-ōd); ECH'O-ING. 1. To send back or repeat (a sound).

Those peals are echoed by the Trojan throng Dryden.

2. To repeat or imitate, as words, sentiments, or a person; to resemble, as a writing or the like.

They would have echoed the praises of the men whom they envied, and then have sent to the newspaper anonymous libels upon them. Macaulay.

ech'o, v. i. 1. To give an echo; to resound; to be sounded back, as, the hall echoed with acclamations; his fame echoes through the years.

2. Whist. To make the play called an echo.

e-cho'ic (ĕ-kō'ĭk), a. [Cf. L. echoicus echoing. See ECHO.] Of the nature of an echo; specif., Philol., formed in imitation of some natural sound; imitative; onomatopœic; as, an echoic word.

ech'o-ism (ĕk'ō ĭz'm), n. Philol. Formation of echoic words; onomatopœia.

ech'o-la'li-a (-lā'lĭ-ă), n. [NL.; echo + Gr. λαλιά speech.] Med. Automatic and purposeless repetition of words.

e-chop'a-thy (ĕ-kŏp'ă-thĭ), n. [echo + -pathy.] Med. A morbid condition characterized by automatic and purposeless repetition of words or imitation of actions echo stop. Music. a A stop upon a harpsichord contrived for producing the soft effect of distant sound. b An organ stop having its pipes inclosed for echolike effects.

ech'u-gin (ĕk'ū-jĭn), n. [Native name in German Southwest Africa.] 1. A dark-colored and intensely bitter solid substance, said to be a product of the apocynaceous plant Adenium boehmianum. It is used as an arrow poison by the Ovampos of Southwest Africa.

2. Chem. A crystalline glucoside isolated from the above.

Eck'hardt, Faithful (ĕk'härt). [G. Der treue Eckhardt.] German Folklore. An old man with a white staff, who appears on the evening of Maundy Thursday to give warning of the approach of Frau Holle (see HOLDA), leading the hosts of the dead. Other traditions represent him as warning travelers from Venusberg, the mountain of fatal delights.

é'clair' (ā'klâr'), n. [F.] Cookery. A small oblong cake, containing flavored cream and glazed or, often, frosted.

e-clair'cise (ĕ-klâr'sīz), v. t. [F. éclaircir ; es- (L. ex) + clair clear, L. clarus.] To explain. Obs.

‖ é'clair-cisse'ment (ā'klâr-sēs'mănN), n. [F., fr. éclaircer. See ECLAIRCISE, v. t.] 1. The clearing up of something obscure or not easily understood; an explanation.

2. = AUFKLÄRUNG.

ec-lamp'si-a (ĕk-lămp'sĭ-ă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἔκλαμψις a shining forth, deriv. of ἐκ out + λάμπειν to shine.] Med a A sudden attack of convulsions, esp. during pregnancy or parturition. b A fancied perception of flashes of light, a symptom of epilepsy. Obs. — ec-lamp'tic (-tĭk), a.

é'clat' (ā'klä'), n. [F. éclat fragment, splinter, explosion, brilliancy, splendor, fr. éclater to splinter, burst, explode, shine brilliantly, OF. esclater to break, to shiver; orig. uncert. Cf. SLATE, n.] 1. Brilliancy; dazzling effect. Obs.

4. Demonstration of admiration and approbation; applause.

ec-lec'tic (ĕk-lĕk'tĭk), a. [Gr. ἐκλεκτικός, fr. ἐκλέγειν to pick out, choose out: cf. F. éclectique. See ECLOGUE; cf. ELECT.] 1. Selecting; choosing what is thought best in doctrines, opinions, etc., from various sources or systems, employing or advocating eclecticism.

2. Consisting, or made up, of what is chosen or selected; as, an eclectic method; an eclectic magazine.

eclectic method (of Greek pronunciation), a method of pronouncing classic Greek approaching the actual ancient pronunciation. It is a restoration of the Erasmian with some alterations. — e. physician, one of a school of professed eclectics in medicine, — formerly, sometimes the same as botanic physician. U. S. — E. school. Painting. a An Italian school of the decadence, led by the Carracci at Bologna (about 1585–1609 A. D.) and numbering among its later followers Domenichino, Guido Reni, and Guercino. Its principle was to combine the several excellences of various masters, as Raphael's design, Michelangelo's drawing, Titian's color, and Correggio's chiaroscuro. b A French school of the early 19th century, founded by Delaroche with the principle of uniting the drawing of the Classic school and the subjects and color of the Romanticists.

ec-lec'tic (ĕk-lĕk'tĭk), n. One who follows a selective method; esp., an eclectic philosopher, physician, or painter. the Eclectics, the painters of the Italian Eclectic school.

ec-lec'ti-cism (-tĭ-sĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. éclecticisme. Cf. ELECTICISM.] 1. The use of an eclectic method; the practice of choosing doctrines from various or diverse systems of thought in the formation of a body of acceptable doctrine, or the advocacy of this practice. Eclecticism, like syncretism and skepticism, appears only where several powerful, antagonistic systems are in the field, hence in an era of developed historical consciousness. Unlike skepticism, it does not doubt all systems because of the antagonistic reasonableness of each; and unlike syncretism, it does not modify all for the sake of mutual consistency; rather it selects from each its psychologically satisfying doctrines, and thus gains whatever consistency the eclectic system may have from the inner conformity of the eclectic's own temperament. Ancient eclecticism is held to date from about the 2d century B. C., and includes in the main two types, that of moralists such as Cicero and Boethius, and that of commentators, with large historical interests, such as Andronicus of Rhodes and Alexander of Aphrodisias. In theology it appears in the Alexandrian school (Clement, Origen, etc.), though here with syncretic tendencies. Later eclectics have been chiefly students of the history of philosophy, such as John of Salisbury (d. 1182) and the French eclectics of the 19th century. Of the last mentioned, Victor Cousin (1792–1867) is especially noteworthy as having formulated eclecticism as a method, truths sufficient to form an adequate philosophy have already been expressed, he held, and need only to be brought together.

2. That which is formed eclectically.

e-clipse' (ĕ-klĭps'), n. [F. éclipse, L. eclipsis, fr. Gr. ἔκλειψις, prop., a forsaking, failing, fr. ἐκλείπειν to leave out, forsake; ἐκ out + λείπειν to leave. See EX-; LOAN.]

1. Astron. The interposition of a dark celestial body between a luminous one and the eye; or the passing of a luminous body into the shadow of another body. Thus, a solar eclipse is caused by the moon's passing between sun and earth; a lunar eclipse, by the moon's entering the earth's shadow; an eclipse of a planetary satellite, by its entering the shadow of its primary. A lunar eclipse may be penumbral (when the moon's limb enters the penumbra only), partial, or total. It is central when the moon passes centrally through the shadow. A solar eclipse may be: partial, in which the sun is only partly obscured and no annulus is formed; annular, when the moon is more distant than usual, so that around its disk is a thin ring of true sunlight unob-

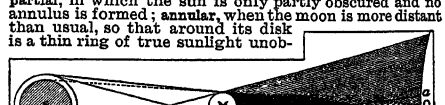

Diagram of Annular Eclipse, showing: the Sun, S, the Moon, M, and a portion of the Earth, E, the moon being at such a distance from the earth that its (black) conical Shadow of Total Obscuration terminates at V, so that an observer on the earth between A and a or between B and b sees a Partial Eclipse, an observer at any point between a and b an Annular Eclipse, the obscured portion of the sun to an observer at O being shown by the shaded part of the sun's disk.

scured; total; or central, when the moon is at the critical distance where its conical shadow, passing over the earth, falls short of certain regions (annular eclipse visible), but touches others in between (totality visible). See OCCULTATION, TRANSIT. Eclipses were formerly, and among unenlightened people still are, regarded as ill omens.

That fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses dark. Milton.

E-chi'no-cy'tis (-sīs'tĭs), n. [NL. See ECHINO-; CYST.] Bot. Syn. of MICRAMPELIS.

E-chi'no-der'es (ĕk'Ī-nōd'ēr-ēz), n. [NL.; echino- + Gr. δέρη neck.] Zoöl. A genus of minute, segmented, spinous marine worms, distantly related to the Nematoda, sometimes regarded as constituting a separate class, Kinorhyncha.

Syn. — See FRUGAL.

e'co-nom'ics (-ĭks), n The science that investigates the conditions and laws affecting the production, distribution, and consumption of wealth, or the material means of satisfying human desires; political economy. The term political economy or (Blackstone) public economy was originally, in medieval and later times, used in its literal sense to denote the art of managing the business affairs of a government, just as domestic economy denoted the art of managing the business affairs of a household. A gradual change took place in the nature of the subject matter denoted by the term with the change in principle and conceptions from mercantilism to physiocratism, and from that to the modern ideas which were first outlined with some adequacy in Adam Smith's "Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations" (1776). A division has been commonly made since Adam Smith's day into a theoretical branch, comprising the investigation of the general laws affecting the production, distribution, and consumption of wealth, and a practical branch, showing the application of these laws to the problems of government. To this latter branch, covering the field of political economy in its older sense, the name of applied political economy is sometimes given, to distinguish it from pure political economy or, as it is now more generally and appropriately termed, economics.

See DICTION.] 1. A public notice issued by official or state authority; a public command or ordinance by the sovereign power; the proclamation of a law or rule of conduct made by competent authority. The most important edicts of early Rome were those of the prætors. When the edict embodied a statement of a new magistrate's general principles of administration, it was called an ‖ e-dic'tum per-pe'tu-um (ē-dĭk'tŭm pĕr-pĕt'ū-ŭm), perpetual edict. Such edicts published by the city and alien prætors and by the curule ædiles were called ‖ e-dic'ta ur-ba'na (ē-dĭk'tȧ ûr-bā'nȧ), city edicts, as distinguished from the ‖ e-dic'ta pro-vin'ci-a'li-a (prō-vĭn'shĭ-ā'lĭ-a), provincial edicts, of the provincial governors and quæstors. The portion of an edict taken by a prætor from that of his predecessor was called the ‖ e-dic'tum tra/la-ti'ti-um (trā/lȧ-tĭsh'ĭ-ŭm), transmitted edict. The edicts perpetua finally embodied a great part of the civil law, and were consolidated and arranged in the Perpetual Edict by Salvius Julianus, in 131 A. D., which time marked the end of the prætors' legislative power. With the loss of the prætors' imperium the making of edicts was assumed by the emperors, and the term survived in application to various laws promulgated by the French kings.

-ee (-ē). [Formed on the F. p. p. ending -é, masc.] A suffix used, chiefly in law terms, in a passive signification, to indicate the indirect, sometimes the direct, object of an action, the one to whom an act is done or on whom a right is conferred; as in assignee, donee, alienee, grantee, etc. It is correlative to -or, the agent or doer.

☞ The reference "See -EE" is sometimes given as the only definition of a word ending in -ee if its meaning can be readily gathered from the definitions of the suffix and the root.

eel (ēl), n. [AS. ēl; akin to D., G., & Dan. aal, Icel. āll, Sw. ål.] 1. Any of numerous voracious, elongated, snakelike, teleost fishes constituting the order Apodes (which see). They have a smooth slimy skin (often without scales) and are destitute of pelvic and sometimes also of pectoral fins. The common eels of Europe and North America are important food fishes. They have minute scales embedded in the skin. The European form (Anguilla anguilla) and the American (A. chrisypa) are scarcely distinguishable. They ascend fresh-water streams, but descend to the sea and to deep water to breed, and pass through a peculiar larval stage in which the body is compressed and transparent. These larvæ were formerly regarded as a different family of fishes, called Leptocephalidæ. See CONGER EEL, MORAY.

Common Eel (Anguilla anguilla). (⅛)

2. Any of various other elongated fishes, as the electric eel (which see), or of the lampreys, which are often called lamper eels; also, any of certain worms, as the vinegar eel.

ef'fa-ble (ĕf'ə-b'l), a. [L. effabilis; ex out + fari to speak.] Capable of being uttered or expressed. Obs. or R.

ef-face' (ĕ-fās'), v. t.; EF-FACED' (-fāst'); EF-FAC'ING (-fās'ĭng). [F. effacer; es- (L. ex) + face face; prop., to destroy the face or form. See FACE; cf. DEFACE.] 1. To cause to disappear (as anything impressed or inscribed upon a surface) by rubbing out, striking out, etc.; to erase; to render illegible or indiscernible; as, to efface the letters on a monument, or the inscription on a coin.

2. To destroy, as a mental impression; to wear away.

Syn. — Blot out, expunge, obliterate, cancel. See ERASE.

ef-fect' (ĕ-fĕkt'), n. [L. effectus, fr. efficere, effectum, to effect; ex + facere to make: cf. F. effet, formerly also spelled effect. See FACT.] 1. That which is produced by an agent or cause; the event which follows immediately from an antecedent, result; consequence; outcome; fruit; as, the effect of luxury. See CAUSE, 1.

Terrestrial gravity is not an effect of general gravitation, but a case of it. J. S Mill.

Cause contains within its own definition an express relation to effect; effect likewise its essential relation to cause. Hence cause and effect are in Hegel's sense "terms of reflection," each term reflecting the other and not to be explained without the other. W. T. Harris

Effect can never be cause, and yet effect may be as inevitable, as essential to the sequence, as necessary a ground of hypothetical nexus as ever cause could be B Bosanquet

2. Consequence intended; purport; meaning; intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron. XXXIV. 22.

3. Manifestation; expression; sign. Obs. or R.

All the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shak.

4. State or fact of being operative or realized; accomplishment; execution; performance; as, the law goes into effect in May; — often in the phrases to give effect to, to take effect, to bring, or carry, into effect.

That no compunctious visitings of nature Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between The effect and it. Shak.

5. Reality; actual meaning; fact, as distinguished from mere appearance.

No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

6. A distinctive impression, viewed as the result of a special agency; as, to act for effect; to speak with effect; hence, a method or device for producing such an impression; as, chiaroscuro effects; stage effects.

Patchwork . . . introduced for oratorical effect. J. C Sharp.

The effect was heightened by the wild and lonely nature of the place. Irving.

7. pl. Goods; movables; personal estate; as, the people escaped from the town with their effects; — sometimes used to embrace real as well as personal property.

8. Amount; quantity. Cf. FECK, n., 2. Obs. Chaucer.

9. Mech. The amount of useful work performed in some interval of time of definite length. Rankine.

10. Sugar Manuf., etc. A system of vacuum pans so arranged that the vapor from the first heats the liquid in the second, which is under a higher vacuum, and so on; as, a triple effect; also, a single member of such a system.

Syn. — EFFECT, CONSEQUENCE, RESULT. An EFFECT is the direct correlative of a cause, with which it implies a relatively immediate connection; a CONSEQUENCE follows more indirectly or remotely; a RESULT (which may or may not be immediate) is thought of as concluding or terminating the action of a cause; as, the effect of a blow on the head may be concussion of the brain; the consequence, shattered health; the result, the retirement of the injured man from active business. See EFFECT, v. t., EFFECTIVE; cf. CAUSE, INTENTION.

ef-fect', v. t.; EF-FECT'ED; EF-FECT'ING. 1. To produce; to do; to make.

So great a body such exploits to effect. Daniel.

2. To bring to pass; to execute; enforce; accomplish.

They sailed away without effecting their purpose. Jowett.

Syn. — Do, complete, realize, carry out, bring about, consummate, compass, fulfill. — EFFECT, EXECUTE, PERFORM, DISCHARGE, ACCOMPLISH, ACHIEVE agree in the idea of carrying out to a proposed end. To EFFECT is to bring about, frequently in the face of resistance or obstacles; as, "The passage of the Red Sea was effected by a strong wind, which, we are told, drove back the waters" (Coleridge). To EXECUTE is to carry into effect, often by some set mode of operation; as, "The villainy you teach me, I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction" (Shak.); "My counsel sends to execute a deed" (Pope). To PERFORM (sometimes merely a formal synonym for do) frequently implies protracted or regular activity; as, "with parrot tongue performed the scholar's part" (Cowper); "And with joy the stars perform their shining, and the sea its long moon-silvered roll" (M. Arnold). To DISCHARGE implies an obligation; as, "I had discharged my confidential duties as secretary . . . to the general satisfaction" (De Quincey); "God moldeth some for a schoolmaster's life, undertaking it with desire and delight, and discharging it with dexterity and happy success" (Fuller). To ACCOMPLISH is to bring to completion, often by the exercise of perseverance or skill; as, "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" (Luke xii. 50); "He . . . leaves the accomplished plan that he has touched, retouched, many a long day labored" (Cowper). ACHIEVE commonly suggests an enterprise or undertaking of difficulty or importance; as, "To achieve the difficult work of recasting the mind of the original author in the mold of a translation" (J. H. Newman). See EFFECT, EFFECTIVE, CLOSE, OBTAIN.

ef-fec'tive (ĕ-fĕk'tĭv), a. [L. effectivus: cf. F. effectif.] 1. Having the power to produce an effect or effects; producing a decided or decisive effect; efficient; serviceable; operative; as, an effective force, remedy, speech, temperature; the effective men in a regiment.

They are not effective of anything. Bacon.

2. Real; actual; — opposed to nominal, and used specif. to designate money having intrinsic value, as coin, as distinguished from fiat money.

Syn. — Active, operative, capable, competent, adequate. — EFFECTIVE, EFFECTUAL, EFFICIENT, EFFICACIOUS agree in describing an object as productive of result (see POWERFUL). EFFECTIVE emphasizes the actual production of an effect, whose continuance in the future it often suggests; as, a law becomes effective on a given date, effective capital. EFFECTUAL also refers to a present result, but regards it more as adequately fulfilling a purpose, so that the term frequently becomes synonymous with "decisive, final," and looks backward rather than forward; as, an effectual measure, an effectual refutation, retort. EFFICIENT applies to that which is actively operative and produces its result through the exercise of energy, so that it often becomes synonymous with "capable, competent;" as, an efficient cause, officer, workman. EFFICACIOUS (see potent, under POWERFUL) emphasizes the possession of such quality or virtue as renders effective; as, an efficacious remedy. Efficacious and efficient refer the result to some power or quality inherent or residing in the cause; an object may be effective or effectual through some source or agency outside itself. Effective and efficacious are rarely used of personal agents. See SKILLFUL, EFFECT.

Set him to write poetry, he is limited, artificial, and impotent; . . . to write prose, he is free, natural, and effective. M. Arnold.

His recommendation was effectual, and I was . . . chosen. Gibbon.

Phœbe, and the fire that boiled the teakettle, were equally bright, cheerful, and efficient, in their . . . offices. Hawthorne.

ef'fi-ca-cy (ĕf'ĭ-kă-sĭ), n. [L. efficacia, fr. efficax. See EFFICACIOUS.] 1. Power to produce effects; as, the efficacy of medicine in counteracting disease; the efficacy of prayer. "Of noxious efficacy." Milton.

2. Causal operation; efficient action.

Syn. — Virtue, potency, force, efficiency.

ef-fi'cience (ĕ-fĭsh'ĕns) } n. [L. efficientia.] 1. Quality ef-fi'cien-cy (-ĕn-sĭ) } of being efficient, or producing an effect or effects; efficient power or action.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us. Hooker.

As to cause, it is absurd to credit inert mass with efficiency, and so we have left on the physical side only quantitative relations expressed in equations of motion, and the like. In psychology the meaning to be given to causal efficiency, if any, is still in dispute. James Ward

2. Mech. The ratio of the energy or work that is got out of a machine, a storage battery, an electrical distributing system, or the like, to the energy put in. The energies may not be of the same kind; as, for example, in the steam engine, heat energy is put in, and mechanical energy is got out.

3. Pol. Econ. Economic productivity; power of producing wealth.

efficiency of a joint, Mech., the ratio of the tensile strength of the joint to that of the solid material if the joint did not exist. In riveted work it varies from .50 to .84, about.

efficiency wages. Wages proportioned to the productiveness of the wage earner; — contrasted with day wages.

ef-fi'cient (-ĕnt), a. [L. efficiens, -entis, p. pr. of efficere to effect: cf. F. efficient. See EFFECT, n.] 1. Serving as, or characteristic of, the efficient cause (see below); causally active; operant; as, the efficient action of heat.

2. Characterized by energetic and useful activity; not inactive, slack, or incapable; as, an efficient officer.

Syn. — Effectual, efficacious, competent, capable, able, potent. See EFFECTIVE.

efficient cause, the working or moving cause; the cause which exists in time before the effect and acts as the immediate agency for the production of the effect; the cause conceived as embodying the activity, impulsion, or force, which acts directly to produce the effect. See CAUSE, 1.

ef-fi'cient, n. 1. An efficient cause. Obs.

2. Mil. In the British service, a volunteer holding a certificate of proficiency and receiving a special allowance.

3. Math. A multiplier or factor of a product. Obs.

ef-fund' (ĕ-fŭnd'), v. t.; -FUND'ED; -FUND'ING. [L. effundere. See EFFUSE.] To pour out; to effuse. Now Rare.

ef-fuse' (ĕ-fūz'), a. [L. effusus, p. p. of effundere to pour out, ex + fundere to pour. See FUSE to melt.] 1. Poured out freely; hence, prodigal; profuse. Obs. or R.

So should our joy be very effuse. Barrow.

2. Bot. a Diffuse; loosely spreading, as the panicle of a grass. b Spread out flat without definite form, as the thallus of some lichens. Cf. EFFIGURATE.

3. Zoöl. a Having the lips of the aperture separated by a gap; —said of certain shells. b Loosely connected; —opposed to compact.

ef-fuse' (ĕ-fūz'), v. t.; EF-FUSED' (-fūzd'); EF-FUS'ING (-fūz'ĭng). To pour out or forth, as a liquid; hence, to send forth; to shed; dispense; disseminate.

With gushing blood effused. Milton

ef-fuse', v. i. 1. To emanate; issue. Thomson.

2. Physics. To flow out through an aperture; —said of the passage of gases through an opening of sufficient size to permit of a movement of the fluid as a mass. See EFFUSION, 4.

ef-fu'sion (ĕ-fū'zhŭn), n. [L. effusio: cf. F. effusion.] 1. Act of effusing, or pouring out; as, effusion of water, of blood, of grace, of words, and the like.

To save the effusion of my people's blood. Dryden.

2. That which is effused, or poured out; esp., an unrestrained utterance in speech or writing.

Wash me with that precious effusion. Erkon Basilike.
The light effusions of a heedless boy. Byron.

3. Med. a Escape of a fluid from its natural vessel, either by rupture of the vessel or by exudation through its walls. b The liquid escaping or exuded.

4. Physics. Act or process of effusing; specif., the flow of a gas through an aperture the diameter of which is very large as compared with that of the molecules. The velocity with which a gas will pass through such an opening into a vacuum is inversely proportional to the square root of the density of the gas.

effusion balance. Physics. An apparatus devised by W. N. Shaw, a British physicist, for the study of ventilation, consisting of connected compartments with adjustable apertures for the influx and efflux of air, and a pivoted vane for indicating the direction of the currents.

ef-fu'sive (ĕ-fū'sĭv), a. 1. Pouring out; pouring forth freely. "Washed with the effusive wave." Pope.

2. Unduly emotional; excessively demonstrative.

3. Geol. Of or pertaining to the pouring forth of lava; as, effusive rocks (volcanic rocks or surface lavas as distinguished from so-called intrusive or plutonic rocks); the effusive period of a lava (distinguished from intratelluric period).

—ef-fu'sive-ly, adv. —ef-fu'sive-ness, n.

eft (ĕft), n. [AS. efete lizard. See NEWT.] Zoöl. Orig., a lizard or lizardlike animal; now, usually, a newt, esp. the European species Triton cristatus or T. vulgaris.

2. From time to time; often. Obs.

e-gest' (ĕ-jĕst'), v. t.; E-GEST'ED; E-GEST'ING. [L. egestus, p. p. of egerere to carry out, to discharge, e out + gerere to carry.] Physiol. To cast or throw out; to void, as excrement; to excrete, as indigestible matter, in an extended sense, to excrete by the lungs, skin, or kidneys.

e-ges'ta (ĕ-jĕs'tȧ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. from p. p. of L. egerere. See EGEST.] Physiol. That which is egested, or thrown off from the body by the various excretory channels; excrements; —opposed to ingesta e-ges'tion (-chŭn), n. [L. egestio.] Physiol. Act or process of egesting.

e-ges'tive (-tĭv), a. [From EGEST.] Physiol. Of or pertaining to egestion; —opposed to ingestive.

egg (ĕg), v. t.; EGGED (ĕgd); EGG'ING. [ME. eggen, Icel. eggja, fr. egg edge. See EDGE.] To urge on; to instigate, to incite; — often with on.

Adam and Eve he egged to ill. Piers Plowman.
[She] did egg him on to tell Warner.

egg (ĕg), n. [Icel. egg; akin to AS. æg (whence ME. ey), Sw. ägg, Dan. æg, G. & D. ei, and prob. to OSlav. aje, jaje, L. ovum, Gr. ᾠόν, Ir. ugh, Gael. ubh, and perh. to L. avis bird. Cf. OVAL.] 1. a The oval or spheroidal reproductive body produced by birds and many reptiles, from which, after a period of incubation or development, the young hatches out, esp., in common usage, that of the domestic hen; hence, any of the correspondingly but smaller and usually simpler reproductive bodies of other animals. The egg of a bird when recently laid contains a ball of yellow food material, the yolk, upon which lies a small disk of protoplasmic material (the cicatricle or tread), from which the embryo develops. These constitute the egg in the biological sense (b below), or ovum. The structures which surround it are for its nutriment and protection; as the white, or albumen, a clear semifluid mass of albuminous material, the skin, or membrana putaminis, a tough two-layered membrane lining the shell; and finally the thin but rigid calcareous shell. The eggs of birds are, however, exceptional in their size, amount of yolk, and complexity of the envelopes, the egg of most animals consisting essentially of the germ cell, or ovum, or of the young embryo developing from it, surrounded by a more or less resistant membrane. Hence:

Hen's Egg (Diagrammatic Section). a Cicatricle; b White Yolk; c Yolk Membrane; d Yellow Yolk; e Shell; f Albumen or White; g g Chalazæ; h^1 h^2 Layers of Membrana Putaminis, inclosing Air Space i.

b Biol. The female germ cell of an animal or plant; an ovum. See OVUM, GERM CELL.

2. Anything resembling an egg in form or function.

egg and dart or anchor or tongue, Arch., an egg-shaped ornament, alternating with another in the form of a dart, or anchor, or tongue, used to enrich the ovolo.—to have all one's eggs in one basket, to have all one's capital employed in one investment.

Egg and Dart.

egg, v. i. 1. To apply eggs to, as in dressing glove leather; to cover or mix with eggs, as for cooking.

2. To pelt with eggs. Colloq.

egg albumin. Chem. Ovalbumin. See also ALBUMIN.

egg apparatus. Bot. A group of three cells at the micropylar end of the embryo sac in seed plants, consisting of the egg and two sterile cells, or synergids. The egg apparatus, together with the antipodal cells, is regarded as representing a reduced prothallium.

egg case. Zoöl. a A protective capsule, variously formed in different animals, inclosing one or more eggs; an oötheca. The eggs of many sharks, rays, marine mollusks, and insects are inclosed in such capsules. b The silken pouch in which many spiders carry their eggs.

egg cell. Biol. The female germ cell, or egg proper, exclusive of any envelopes derived from or consisting of other cells. See EGG.

egg coal. A size of anthracite coal. See COAL.

egg cup. A cup made to hold an egg to be eaten from the shell, or sometimes made double with one cup larger to break the egg into.

egg dance. A dance in which the dancer, blindfolded, tries to pass among a number of eggs without breaking any; —formerly common in England.

egg'eat'er (ĕg'ēt'ẽr), n., or egg'-eat'ing snake. Any of several species of small harmless colubrine snakes of the genus Dasypeltis, of central and southern Africa, which feed on birds' eggs. The lower processes of the cervical vertebræ project into the esophagus and form an apparatus for piercing the shell of the egg so that its contents may be swallowed.

eg'ger (ĕg'ẽr), n. [Etymol. uncertain.] Any of various moths of the family Lasiocampidæ, esp. of the genera Eriogaster and Lasiocampa. Their larvæ are destructive to the foliage of trees.

egg glass. A small sandglass, running about three minutes, for marking time in boiling eggs; also, a small glass for holding an egg at table.

egg'ler (ĕg'lẽr), n. One who gathers, or deals in, eggs egg membrane. Embryol. A membrane enveloping an egg; —sometimes limited to the vitelline membrane, or cell wall, of the egg, in other cases applied to envelopes of extraneous origin, as the membrana putaminis.

egg mite. Any mite which devours insects' eggs, as Nothrus ovivorus, which destroys those of the cankerworm.

egg'nog' (ĕg'nŏg'), n. A drink consisting of eggs beaten up with sugar, milk, and (usually) wine or spirits.

egg'plant' (-plănt'), n. a A solanaceous plant (Solanum melongena), of East Indian origin, allied to the potato. b The large smooth ovoid fruit of this plant, white or dark purple when ripe. It is highly esteemed as a garden vegetable, being usually sliced, dipped in batter or bread crumbs, and fried.

Eggplant (Solanum melongena). (½)

egg'-shaped', a. Like a hen's egg in form; ovoid.

egg'shell' (ĕg'shĕl'), n., or, chiefly in sense 2, egg shell. 1. The shell or hard exterior covering of an egg, or something resembling eggshell.

2. Any of various gastropod shells, of Ovula or allied genera, having a smooth surface and somewhat oval or shuttlelike outline.

egg trot. Man. An easy, cautious trot, as if carrying eggs; —called also eggwife's trot.

eg'lan-tine (ĕg'lăn-tīn; 277), n. [F. églantine, fr. OF aiglent brier, hip tree, fr. (an assumed) LL. derivative fr. L. acus needle. See EDGE.] a The sweetbrier (Rosa rubiginosa). b More rarely, the Austrian brier (R. eglanteria).

☞ Milton, in the following lines, has applied the name to some twining plant, perhaps the honeysuckle.

Through the sweetbrier, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine. L'Allegro.

"In our early writers and in Gerarde and the herbalists, it was a shrub with white flowers." Dr. Prior.

e'go (ē'gō; ĕg'ō; 277: see note below), n. [L., lit., I. See I, pron.] a Schol Philos. The entire man considered as union of soul and body. b Metaph. The conscious and permanent subject of all psychical experiences, whether held to be directly known or known only through reflective thought; —opposed to non-ego. c Psychol. The self, whether considered as an organization or system of mental states, or as the consciousness of the individual's distinction from other selves and so as contrasted with an alter or alter ego.

"The unity of the ego," then, to quote the admirable summing up of M. Ribot, "in a psychological sense, is therefore the cohesion, during a given time, of a certain number of clear states of consciousness, accompanied by others less clear, and by a multitude of physiological states, which, without being accompanied by consciousness like the others, yet operate as much and even more than the former. Unity, in fact, means coördination."
F. H. Giddings.

☞ In the U. S. the pronunciation ē'gō, in accordance with the accepted rules for English pronunciation of Latin words, still prevails for this word and its derivatives, but according to the Oxford E. D. this pronunciation is now seldom heard in England.

e'go-ism (ē'gō-ĭz'm; ĕg'ō-; cf. EGO), n. [F. égoïsme, fr. L. ego I. See I; cf. EGOTISM.] 1. Philos. a The doctrine that the individual consciousness alone is knowable; —used vaguely for solipsism. b The doctrine of certain extreme adherents or disciples of Descartes and of Fichte, which finds all the elements of knowledge in the ego and the relations which it implies or provides for.

2. Excessive love and thought of self; the habit of regarding one's self as the center of every interest; living for self-interest; also, the ethical theory which views self-interest or self-development as the end of moral action; —opposed to altruism.

3. Reference to, or exaltation of, one's own experience, conception, or manner of living, esp. in matter of opinion.

4. = EGOTISM, 1.

Syn.—EGOISM, EGOTISM agree in implying intense concentration upon one's self. But EGOISM (which is frequently opposed to altruism) is less likely than EGOTISM to suggest offensive self-conceit. See PRIDE.

She preferred to be herself, with the egoism of women!
G. Meredith.

There is one species of egotism which is truly disgusting; not that which leads us to communicate our feelings to others, but that which would reduce the feelings of others to an identity with our own. Coleridge.

e'go-ist, n. [F. égoïste. See EGOISM.] 1. One given overmuch to egoism, or thoughts of self.

I, dullard egoist, taking no special recognition of such nobleness. Carlyle.

E-gyp'tian (ĕ-jĭp'shăn), n. 1. A native or inhabitant, or one of the people, of Egypt. The ancient Egyptians, or Retu as they called themselves, were a Caucasian people, slender, fair-skinned, with wavy brown hair, probably of the same stock as the modern Kabyles and Berbers. They are supposed to have entered the Nile valley with some arts already developed, and by 5000 B.C. their civilization was highly accomplished. The original type was gradually modified by interminglings with Semitic and Negroid peoples, but the comely features and proud carriage of the Retu still persist among the fellahin. The modern Egyptians include, besides the Mohammedans, the Copts, or native Christians of the same race; also, various tribes of Bedouin Arabs, the Hamitic Bejas, and Nubians with strong Negroid infusion.

2. The language of the ancient Egyptians. There have been three famous talkers in Great Britain, either of whom would illustrate what I say about dogmatists. Holmes.

☞ The pronunciation ī'thĕr is both American and English, but is more prevalent in England (esp. in London and the south) than in America. In the 17th century the word was pronounced approximately ā'thĕr, as shown by Ellis, and according to the most reliable orthoëpists of the period ī'thĕr seems to have been the preferred pronunciation succeeding ā'thĕr in the 18th century. According to Walker, both ē'thĕr and ī'thĕr were in general cultivated use by 1791, since which time the orthoëpists have favored ē'thĕr as being more generally preferred by good speakers.

ei'ther, conj. A disjunctive connective, used: a Before two or more words or phrases indicated as coördinate alternatives, and joined by the correlative or.

Either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth. 1 Kings xviii. 27.

Few writers hesitate to use either in what is called a triple alternative; such as, We must either stay where we are, proceed, or recede. Latham.

b With the force of or. Obs.

Can the fig tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? James iii. 12.

c Following an alternative word or phrase to which it applies emphatically an expressed or implied negation; as, nor you, either. Cf. TOO.

-el, suffix. See -LE.

-el. [OF. -el, -ele; L. -ellus, -ella, -ellum.] A diminutive suffix in words from Latin or French.

e-lab'o-rate (ē-lăb'ō-rāt), a. [L elaboratus, p. p. of elaborare to work out; e out + laborare to labor, labor labor. See LABOR.] 1. Produced by labor. Archaic.

2. Wrought out with great care; studied; executed with exactness or painstaking; as, an elaborate discourse

e-lab'o-rate (-rāt), v. t.; E-LAB'O-RAT'ED (-rāt'ĕd); E-LAB'O-RAT'ING (-rāt'ĭng). 1. To produce with labor.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To work out in detail; to perfect with painstaking; to improve or refine with labor and study, or by successive operations; as, to elaborate a painting or a literary work; also, to perfect or develop by analysis or reasoning; as, to elaborate a theory.

3. Physiol. To convert into an assimilable or useful form, by the natural processes of the cells and organs, as crude or partly digested food material; specif., Plant Physiol., to build up (complex organic compounds from simpler ones) through photosynthetic or other processes (cf. METABOLISM); as, to elaborate sap.

e-lab'o-rate, v. i. To become more elaborate.

e-lab'o-ra'tion (-rā'shŭn), n. [L. elaboratio.] Act or process of elaborating; specif., act of producing or refining with labor; improvement by successive operations.

e-lab'o-ra-tive (ē-lăb'ō-rā-tĭv), a. Serving or tending to elaborate; constructing with labor and attention to details elaborative faculty, Metaph., the power of discerning relations and of viewing objects by means of, or in, relations.

2. Physiol. A part of an organism that performs the process of elaboration.

El'æ-ag-na'ce-æ (ĕl'ē-ăg-nā'sē-ē; ē'lē-), n. pl. [NL. See ELÆAGNUS.] Bot. A small family of trees or shrubs (order Myrtales), the oleaster family, having silvery or scurfy or stellate-pubescent foliage, small perfect or dicœcious flowers, and baccate fruit. There are 3 genera and about 20 species, of wide distribution. Elæagnus and Lepargyrea occur in the United States. — el'æ-ag-na'ceous (-shŭs), a.

El'æ-ag'nus (-ăg'nŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐλαίαγνος a Bœotian marsh plant; ἐλαία olive + ἁγνός sacred, pure.] Bot. A genus of chiefly Asiatic shrubs or trees, typifying the family Elæagnaceæ. They are distinguished by the alternate leaves and perfect flowers, with as many stamens as perianth divisions. E. argentea, the only American species, is the silverberry; E. longipes, with edible fruit, is the goumi.

E-læ'is (ē-lē'ĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐλαία olive tree.] Bot. A genus of pinnate-leaved palms, containing two species, E. melanococca, of Central and South America, and E. guineënsis, the African oil palm (see under AFRICAN).

elæo-, elaio-. Combining forms from Gr. ἔλαιον, olive oil, oil.

El'æ-o-car-pa'ce-æ (ĕl'ē-ō-kär-pā'sē-ē; ē'lē-), n. pl. [NL. See ELÆOCARPUS.] Bot. A family of trees and shrubs (order Malvales) closely related to Tiliaceæ, but distinguished by the pubescent corolla and by other structural characters. There are 7 genera and about 120 species, of wide distribution. The most important are Elæocarpus, Sloanea, and Muntingia, some species of which yield excellent timber. — el'æ-o-car-pa'ceous (-shŭs), a.

El'æ-o-car'pus (-kär'pŭs), n. [NL.; elæo- + Gr. καρπός fruit.] Bot. A large genus of trees and shrubs, type of the family Elæocarpaceæ, having simple leaves and small racemose flowers. They are natives of India and Australia, some species being valuable timber trees. The drupaceous fruit is sometimes used as a pickle or in curries.

e-læ'o-lite (ē-lē'ō-līt), n. Also e-le'o-lite. [elæo- + -lite.] Min. A variety of nephelite, usually massive, of greasy luster, gray to reddish color, and opaque to translucent.

el'æ-om'e-ter (ĕl'ē-ŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [elæo- + -meter.] A special form of hydrometer for estimating the quality of oil (esp. olive oil) by means of its density.

ei'gon (ī'gŏn), n. Pharm. Any of various antiseptic compounds of albumin and iodine.

e-las'o-blast (ē-lăz'ō-blăst), n. [elæo- + -blast.] Zool. The outer chord, or rudimentary notochord, of certain tunicates. — e-las'o-blas'tic (-blăs'tĭk), a.

el'as-od'o-chon (ĕl'ăs-ōd'ō-kŏn), n. [Gr. ἐλαιοδόχος oil-containing.] The oil gland of birds, situated near the base of the tail.

elæolite syenite. Petrog. = NEPHELITE SYENITE.

e-læ'o-mar-gar'ic (ē-lē'ō-mär-gär'ĭk), a. [elæo- + margaric.] Org. Chem. Designating a crystalline acid, $C_{17}H_{33}O_2$, occurring in the form of its glyceryl ester in the oil from the candlenut.

el'æ-op'tene (ĕl'ē-ŏp'tēn), n. Also el'e-op'tene. [elæo- + Gr. πτηνός winged, fleeting.] Chem. The liquid portion of natural essential oils, as distinguished from stearoptene, the part which solidifies.

el'a-id'ic (ĕl'ă-ĭd'ĭk), a. [Gr. ἔλαιον olive oil, oil, fr. ἐλαία the olive tree: cf. F. élaïdique.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating an unsaturated acid, $C_{17}H_{33}CO_2H$, isomeric with oleic acid, and obtained from it by the action of nitrous acid. It is a solid melting at 51° C.

e-la'i-din (ē-lā'ĭ-dĭn), n. [Cf. F. élaïdine.] Chem. An artificial solid fat isomeric with olein. It is glyceryl elaidate.

elaidin test. Anal. Chem. A test for oils based on the observation that nitrous acid converts olein into solid elaidin, while other liquid glycerides are unaffected. The reagent causes nondrying oils to become solid and semidrying oils to become buttery, but drying oils remain liquid.

E-laine' (ē-lān'), n. Any of several ladies in the Arthurian legends; esp., "the lily maid of Astolat," the story of whose unrequited love for Lancelot and consequent death is the subject of one of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King."

elaio-. A combining form meaning olive oil, oil. See ELÆO-.

el'ai-o-plast' (ĕl'ā-ō-plăst'), n. [elaio- + -plast.] Bot. One of the oil-forming plastids in a plant cell. They are highly refractive bodies, usually lying near the nucleus, and secrete oil drops in their spongy protoplasmic framework.

e'land (ē'lănd), n. [D. eland elk, fr. G. elentier, elend: cf. Pol. jelen stag, Russ. olen', Lith. elnis; perh. akin to E. elk.] Zool. The largest of the South African antelopes (Taurotragus oryx), the males sometimes standing six feet in height and weighing over 1,500 pounds. The eland was formerly found in immense herds on the plains of South Africa, but, being of heavy build and comparatively slow, has been practically exterminated. In western equatorial Africa a closely related form (T. derbianus), having dark stripes not present in the South African eland, is still found in considerable numbers.

Eland (Taurotragus oryx), male.

el'a-phine (ĕl'ă-fīn; -fĭn; 183), a. [Gr. ἐλαφος stag.] Zoöl. Pert. to or resembling the red deer (Cervus elaphus).

El'a-pho-my'ces (ĕl'ă-fō-mī'sēz), n. [NL.; Gr. ἐλαφος stag + μύκης mushroom.] Bot. A genus of subterranean trufflelike fungi of the order Aspergillales. They are about the size of walnuts or hickory nuts, and are rooted up and eaten by animals.

el'a-phure (ĕl'ă-fūr), n. [Gr. ἐλαφος stag + οὐρά tail.] A deer (Cervus davidianus) found in China, remarkable for its antlers, which divide into two branches, the anterior of which branches again. It constitutes a subgenus, El'a-phu'rus (-fū'rŭs) [NL.].— el'a-phu'rine (-fū'rĭn; -rīn), a.

E-lap'i-dæ (ē-lăp'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; cf. Gr. ἔλοψ, ἔλλοψ, a kind of fish, also a serpent.] Zool. A family of proteroglyphous venomous snakes, found in the warmer parts of both hemispheres, and containing the majority of Australian snakes. The typical genus is Elaps, consisting of the true coral snakes. The death adder, black snake, and tiger snake of Australia also belong to this family, and in most classifications the cobra and its allies are included. — el'a-pid (ĕl'ă-pĭd), a. & n. — el'a-pine (ĕl'ă-pīn; -pĭn), a.

el'a-poid (-poid), a. Zoöl. Pertaining to, or resembling, the Elapidæ. —n. One of the Elapidæ.

e-lapse' (ē-lăps'), v. i.; E-LAPSED' (-lăpst'); E-LAPS'ING. [L. elapsus, p. p. of elabi to glide away; e out + labi to fall, slide. See LAPSE.] To slip or glide away; to pass away silently, as time; — used chiefly in reference to time.

> Eight days elapsed; at length a pilgrim came. Hoole.

elapsed time, Yachting, the actual time taken by a vessel to sail over a course. See CORRECTED TIME.

2. A passing; lapse. Rare.

El'a-sip'o-da (ĕl'ă-sĭp'ō-dă), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. ἐλασμός metal beaten out, metal plate + -poda.] Zool. An order of holothurians occurring in the deep sea, having well-marked bilateral symmetry, with tube feet on the flattened ventral surface, and papillæ on the dorsal surface.

e-las'mo-branch (ē-lăs'mō-brăŋk; ē-lăz'-), a. Of or pert. to the Elasmobranchii. — n. One of the Elasmobranchii.

E-las'mo-bran'chi-i (-brăŋ'kĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. ἐλασμός a metal plate + L. branchia a gill.] Zoöl. A subclass (in some classifications a class) of fishes having the skeleton mainly cartilaginous, comprising the sharks and rays (Plagiostomi), their extinct allies (the Pleuropterygii, Ichthyotomi, and Acanthodii), and, according to the most recent views, the chimæras (Holocephali) (see these terms). The Elasmobranchii (so named from their lamelliform gills) are also termed Chondropterygii, Selachii, and Placodei. The cranium is an undivided case of cartilage without membrane bones, nor are such bones formed in connection with the jaws or pectoral arch. The latter is formed of a single cartilage on each side, and is entirely separate from the skull. The ventral fins are always manyrayed, and abdominal in position, and the scales, when present, are placoid. The intestine has a spiral valve. There is no air bladder, and the gill clefts (five to seven in number, and separated by broad septa) are exposed externally except in the Holocephali. The ventral fins bear claspers in the male. The eggs are few and of large size, and often hatched within the body.

e-las'tic (ē-lăs'tĭk), a. [Formed fr. Gr. ἐλαύνειν to drive.] 1 Expansive; propulsive. Obs.

2. Springing back; springy; of solids, capable of recovering size and shape after deformation; of gases, indefinitely expansive. Scientifically, of solids, capable of resisting a large deforming force with subsequent recovery; of liquids, capable of resisting compression. See ELASTICITY.

3. Of persons, temperaments, etc., able to return quickly to a former state or condition, after being depressed or overtaxed; recovering easily from shocks and trials; buoyant; as, elastic spirits; an elastic constitution.

4. Econ. & Finance. Enlarging or decreasing readily in response to a change in stimulus, demand, opportunity, or other thing causally connected: thus, when a considerable change in demand is caused by a small rise or fall in price, the demand is elastic, and vice versa.

5. Mach. Characterized by elasticity. See ELASTICITY, 3.

Syn. — ELASTIC, RESILIENT, BUOYANT are here compared in their fig. senses. ELASTIC and RESILIENT suggest more strongly than buoyant recovery from a previous state of depression. Elastic implies swift response to removal of pressure; resilient, the power of rebounding quickly, or springing back to an original state; as, "Not an elastic or optimistic nature — on the contrary, rigid and circumscribed, depressed by a melancholy temperament" (J. A. Symonds); cf. "His spirit, too, was of astonishing elasticity" (M. Arnold); a constitution as resilient as a rubber ball, cf. "the common resiliency of the mind from one extreme to another" (Johnson). BUOYANT (cf. "Books . . . pushed into the strong current of popularity, and there kept buoyant by the force of the stream," Crabbe) implies such lightness or vivacity of heart or spirits as is either incapable of depression or else readily shakes it off; as, "No such immaterial burden could depress that buoyant-hearted young gentleman for many hours together" (G. Eliot); "a friend . . . whose buoyant fancy . . . ever leaped resurgent from the strokes of fortune" (E. Dowden). See REBOUND, FLEXIBLE, DUCTILE, LIVELY.

elastic bitumen. Min. See ELATERITE. — e. cartilage, Anat., a yellowish flexible variety of cartilage occurring chiefly in the external ear, Eustachian tube, arytenoid cartilages, cartilages of Wrisberg and Santorini, and epiglottis. The matrix, except immediately about the cells, is penetrated by elastic fibers extending in all directions. — e. currency, a currency which automatically increases and decreases in bulk with the demands of business, as where there is an elastic limit (which see). — e. curve, Mech., the curve assumed by the longitudinal axis of an originally straight elastic strip or bar bent within its elastic limits by any system of forces. — e. fatigue. = FATIGUE, n., 4. — e. fiber or fibre, specif., Anat., the characteristic fibers of elastic tissue. — e. fluid. = GAS, n., 1. — e. gum, caoutchouc. — e. hysteresis. = MECHANICAL HYSTERESIS. — e. lag. Mech. See LAG, n. — e. limit, or strength. a The amount of stress which is just sufficient to produce an appreciable permanent deformation, or set, in a solid body, as a bar of metal. Experiments indicate that any stress, however slight, produces a set, but the amount of such deformation in proportion to the amount of the stress is at first very small. Since under repeated strains the elastic limit continually changes, a substance may possess a series of such limits, represented diagrammatically by a curve. The elastic limit of the substance in its original or unstrained condition is then distinguished as the original or primitive elastic limit. b Commercially, in tests of materials of construction, a point at which a large increase of deformation is produced without increase of load. Cf. YIELD POINT. W. C. Unwin. c Banking. A limit on the issue of bank notes which may be temporarily increased to meet a stringency in the money market. The Imperial Bank of Germany has an elastic limit; but in Great Britain and the United States the limit is not elastic, the temporary need being more or less met by government actions. — e. resilience. Mech. = RESILIENCE. — e. tissue, Anat., a variety of connective tissue consisting largely of coarse (sometimes very thick) fibers of smooth outline, great elasticity, yellowish color, and strong refractive power, which branch and anastomose. They are very resistant to acids and alkalies, and are composed of a peculiar substance called elastin. Such fibers are widely distributed in ordinary connective tissue, but the term elastic tissue is applied only where the elastic fibers predominate, as in the ligamentum nuchæ of quadrupeds and in certain layers in the walls of the larger arteries.

e-las'tic, n. Fabric rendered elastic by fine strings of India rubber woven into the center of it, used for garters, suspenders, etc.; also, India rubber specially prepared in cords, strings, or bands so as to be very elastic; specif., a piece of such fabric or rubber.

e-las-ti'cian (ē'lăs-tĭsh'ăn), n. One versed in the study of elasticity.

e-las-tic'i-ty (-tĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. 1. Quality or state of being elastic; capability of a strained body to recover its size and shape after deformation in any way; springiness. Popularly, a body is said to possess great elasticity when it is easily deformed and is quick in recovering. Thus a piece of India rubber easily elongated, a spiral spring easy of extension or compression, or a bow easily bent, would be considered very elastic. Scientifically, elasticity is that property of a body which causes it to resist deformation and afterward to recover its original shape and size. From this standpoint a block of steel or glass would possess much greater elasticity than an easily extended piece of India rubber. Elasticity of volume is a universal property, in a greater or less degree, of all matter; elasticity of shape, of solids only. Each is measured by the coefficient, or modulus, of elasticity, which is the ratio of the impressed stress to the induced strain. Thus, for a prismatic bar under longitudinal tension or compression the modulus of elasticity is $\frac{f}{\frac{l}{L}}$ or $\frac{fL}{l}$ lbs. per square inch, where f = stress in lbs. per square inch on the bar, L = original length of bar, l = extension or compression. Thus the elasticity is dependent only on the material of a body. The range of elasticity of a body is the range between its elastic limits of tension and compression, and is constant for any one body. Thus if a body is strained so that its elastic limit of tension is raised, its elastic limit of compression is lowered by an equal amount. Cf. RESILIENCE.

the genus Torpedo, syn. Malapterurus (esp. T. electricus of the Nile). They have a large electrical organ and are able to give powerful shocks. — e. charge, the quantity of electricity which exists on the surface of a body. — e. circuit. See CIRCUIT, n., 8. — e. clock a A clock moved or regulated by electricity or electromagnetism. b A clock connected with an electromagnetic recording apparatus. — e. column, a voltaic pile. See PILE, n., Elec. — e. current, electricity traversing a closed circuit formed of conducting substances, or passing by means of conductors from one body to another which is in a different electrical state. — e. density, electric charge per unit area. — e. discharge. = DISCHARGE, n., 11. — e. displacement, the displacing of electricity in a dielectric caused by subjecting it to electric stress. — e. dogfish, a stargazer (Astroscopus y-græcum) of the Atlantic coast of the United States, said to have electric properties. — e. eel, an eel-like physostomous fish (Electrophorus, syn. Gymnotus, electricus), of the rivers of the Orinoco and Amazon basins, the most powerful of electric fishes. It becomes six feet long, and is said to be able to disable large animals by its shocks. The electric organs are situated along the posterior ventral part of the body. The fish constitutes a separate genus (Electrophorus) and family (Electrophoridæ). — e. effluvium, an effluvium formerly supposed to issue from charged bodies; — now sometimes applied to the silent discharge. — e. egg, an ellipsoidal glass vessel with metal caps at each end. It is used for studying the effect of pressure on the electric discharge. — e. elasticity. = ELASTIVITY. — e. endosmose or endosmosis. See OSMOSIS. — e. engineering. See ENGINEERING, 1. — e. engraving, a method of etching in which the metallic plate, instead of being treated with acid in the ordinary way, is attached to the anode of an electrolytic cell and thus corroded electrically. — e. escapement. Horol. See ESCAPEMENT, 3. — e. fish, any of several fishes which are able to communicate electric shocks by means of a special set of organs. Those which have this power in the greatest degree are the electric eel, the electric catfishes, and the electric rays or torpedoes, in the order named. In all, the electric organs consist of modified muscular tracts abundantly supplied with nerves. — e. fluid, a (supposed) imponderable fluid to whose presence electrical phenomena have been ascribed; electricity. The term is no longer scientific. — e. force, a force due to electricity; specif., the force of attraction or repulsion due to an electrostatic charge. — e. furnace, a furnace in which the source of heat is an electric current. The greatest heat is obtained by the use of the arc, whose temperature (estimated to be about 3,500° C., or 6,300° F.) only the most refractory materials can withstand, even for a short time. Such furnaces are used for manufacturing carbides, carborundum, etc., for reducing ores, and for many other purposes. — electric fuse. See FUSE, n. — e. generator, a generator of electricity, esp. a dynamo. See DYNAMO. — e. glow, a pale blue light sometimes accompanying noiseless electric discharges. — e. helix. See HELIX, 1. — e. horse power. See HORSE POWER. — e. ignition. See INTERNAL-COMBUSTION ENGINE. — e. image, a collection of electrical points regarded as forming, by an analogy with optical phenomena, an image of certain other electrical points, and used in solving electrical problems. — e. light, the light which is produced by a current of electricity which in passing through a resisting medium heats it to incandescence or burns it. See INCANDESCENT LIGHT; ARC, n., 5. — e.-light bug. See FISH KILLER. — e. lobes, Zoöl., in the electric rays, the part of the medulla which controls the electric organs. See ELECTRIC RAY. — e. machine, or electrical machine, a machine for generating, collecting, or exciting, electricity. Statical electricity may be produced either by friction, as in the frictional machine, or by induction, as in the Holtz, Toepler-Holtz, and Wimshurst, machines. Dynamical electricity is produced mechanically by the dynamo. — e. meter, an instrument for measuring electricity. See AMMETER, METER, VOLTMETER, WATTMETER. — e. motor, a motor driven by electricity. It is similar in construction to the dynamo; in fact, a dynamo acts as a motor when a current is passed through it. — e. organ. See ELECTRIC FISH. — e. oscillation, any of the series of intermittent discharges which make up the complete discharge of a condenser or Leyden jar; an electric surging or the movement of electric waves in any electric disturbance, esp. when of extremely high frequency. — e. osmose or osmosis. See OSMOSIS. — e. pen, a kind of hand pen for making stencils, consisting essentially of a puncturing needle and a small magneto-electric device for making it reciprocate at great speed. — e. pendulum, a pith ball suspended from a silk thread. See ELECTROSCOPE. — e. potential. = POTENTIAL, n., 4. — e. pulse, an electric wave; a momentary flow of electricity through a conductor. — e. radiation, radiation of energy by means of electric waves. — e. railroad or railway, one in which the cars are driven by electric motors. Its system of motive power may be either independent, in which the current is taken from storage batteries carried on the cars, or dependent, in which it is taken from wires or other conductors external to the cars. See TROLLEY, n. According to the position of these conductors the latter system is further called overhead, surface, or underground. — e. ray, Zoöl., any of certain rays constituting the family Narcobatidæ (syn. Torpedinidæ) which have the anterior part of the body rounded and disklike, the tail short and ending in a rayed fin, and a pair of electric organs between the head and the pectoral fins; a numbfish, or torpedo. The common European species is Narcobatus (syn. Torpedo) torpedo. That of the Atlantic coast of the United States, Tetronarce occidentalis, becomes about five feet long, and is capable of giving a severe shock. Tetronarce californica is an allied but smaller species of the Pacific coast. — e. repulsion, repulsion between bodies possessing like charges of electricity. — e. residue. = RESIDUAL CHARGE. — e. resistance. = RESISTANCE, n., 4. — e. resonator. = RESONATOR C. — e. rings. = NOBILI'S RINGS. — e. seal, a fur consisting of cony skin dyed to imitate sealskin. — e. sheathfish. = ELECTRIC CATFISH. — e. shock. = SHOCK, n., 4. — e. smelting, the process of smelting by heat derived from an electric arc or current in the charge rather than from the combustion of fuel in the furnace. It is claimed to be applicable to many branches of metallurgy, and esp. to the treatment of copper, steel, and alloys, and to the differential smelting of aluminium ore. — e. spark. = 1st SPARK, n., 4. — e. spectrum. a That portion of the spectrum whose rays are electrical in character. See SPECTRUM, n., 2. b A spectrum produced by an electric spark, an electric arc, or electric discharge through a rarefied gas. — e. switch. = SWITCH, n., 5. — e. tape, Elec., a flexible tape treated with some insulating material. — e. telegraph. See TELEGRAPH. — e. tension. = TENSION, n., 5. — e. thermometer, an instrument for measuring differences of temperature by means of electric effects, such as variations in resistance, or the production of a current in a thermoelectric couple. — e. tooth. See SAW, n., Illust. — e. units. See UNIT. — e. vane or whirl, an apparatus consisting of several wires with bent points, radiating from a central cap which rests on a pivot. When the vane is charged, the points allow electricity to escape into the air and are repelled, causing the vane to rotate. — e. varnish, any varnish of good insulating properties. — e. wave. a A wavelike periodic disturbance of the ether by means of which electric energy is transmitted or radiated across space. b The rising or falling of an electric current in a submarine cable. — e. welding. See WELD, v. t., 1. — e. wind. = AURA, 4.

Frictional Electric Machine. 1 Glass Plate revolved by means of Crank 3, between Rubbers 2, 2, and horseshoe-shaped toothed Rods 4, 4 fixed in metal Cylinders 5, 5, which are connected by a small Rod 6. The negative electricity produced by friction on the rubbers is carried away by a Chain 7.

Electric Vane.

e-lec'tric (ē-lĕk'trĭk), n. 1. Physics. A nonconductor of electricity, as amber, glass, resin, etc., employed to excite or accumulate electricity.

2. An electric car or trolley; an electromobile. Colloq.

e-lec-tri'cian (ē-lĕk-trĭsh'ăn), n. 1. An investigator of electricity; one versed in the science of electricity.

2. One versed in the practice of electricity; one who makes or repairs electric instruments, machinery, etc., or who sets up, or looks after, electric installations; a designer of such machinery, installations, etc.

electrician sergeant. Mil. In the United States army, a sergeant (with the pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant) stationed at each post of coast artillery having electrical appliances.

e-lec-tric'i-ty (ē-lĕk-trĭs'ĭ-tĭ; 277), n. [See ELECTRIC.] 1. The agency to which are due numerous phenomena in physics formerly ascribed to the action of certain hypothetical media (the electric fluid of Franklin's theory, the positive fluid and negative fluid of the two-fluid theory, and the magnetic fluid), but which modern theorists are inclined to regard as arising from strains or displacements in the luminiferous ether. All the phenomena in question result from force action in certain fields of force called respectively electric and magnetic fields. According to the modern view these fields are the loci of strains in the ether, and the electrification of bodies is due to the presence of free particles of matter (very small as compared with the hydrogen atom) the ether surrounding which is permanently in the condition of strain which constitutes an electric field. Electricity was formerly classed under two heads: a Statical (called also frictional electricity), the electricity of stationary charges produced by rubbing together unlike bodies, such as glass and silk, in which case equal and opposite charges are always produced, or by induction. b Dynamical (also called voltaic, or current, electricity), produced by chemical decomposition in a battery, or by moving a conductor across the lines of force of a magnetic field, as in a dynamo, or by difference of temperature between the junctions of a thermo-element (then called thermoelectricity), etc. The term statical electricity applies properly, however, to the electricity of stationary charges, however produced; the term dynamical electricity, to moving charges, which give rise to the phenomena of the electric current, whether generated by friction, by induction, by means of a voltaic battery or dynamo, or in any other way. The electric current is of especial practical importance as a convenient means of transferring energy to a distance and for the transformation of energy, as in the electric furnace, the electric light, in electrolysis, etc. See POSITIVE ELECTRICITY; NEGATIVE ELECTRICITY.

2. The science which unfolds the phenomena and laws of electricity; electrical science.

e-lec'tri-co- (ē-lĕk'trĭ-kō-). Combining form for electric. = ELECTRO-. Hence: e-lec'tri-co—me'te-or-o-log'i-cal, pertaining to electricity and meteorology.

e-lec'tri-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. Act of electrifying, or state of being electrified; also, a system of electrical equipment.

e-lec'tri-fy (ē-lĕk'trĭ-fī), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'Ing). [electric + -fy.] 1. To communicate electricity to; to charge with electricity; as, to electrify a jar.

2. To cause electricity to pass through; to affect by electricity; to give an electric shock to; as, he was electrified.

3. To equip for employment of electric power; as, to electrify a railroad.

4. To excite suddenly and violently, esp. by something highly delightful or inspiriting; to thrill.

If the sovereign were now to immure a subject in defiance of the writ of habeas corpus . . . the whole nation would be instantly electrified by the news. Macaulay.

e-lec'tri-fy, v. i. To become electric.

e-lec'tro- (ē-lĕk'trō-). Combining form for electric, electrical; as, *electro*negative, *electro*meter, etc.

e-lec'tro—a-nal'y-sis (-ă-năl'ĭ-sĭs), n. Chem. Analysis by electrolytic methods.

e-lec'tro-bal-lis'tics (-bă-lĭs'tĭks), n. Art or science of electrically measuring the velocity of projectiles. From the muzzle velocity the force or muzzle energy can be deduced. The projectile is usually fired through two screens (or ruptures wires at two points of flight), and the time interval of passage is usually measured by the chronograph. — e-lec'tro-bal-lis'tic (-tĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-bi-ol'o-gy (-bī-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. That branch of biology which treats of the electrical phenomena of living organisms. — e-lec'tro-bi'o-log'i-cal (-bī'ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — e-lec'tro-bi-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

e-lec'tro-bi-os'co-py (-bī-ŏs'kŏ-pĭ), n. Biol. Bioscopy by noting the presence or absence of muscular contraction on electric stimulation.

e-lec'tro-cap'il-lar'i-ty (-kăp'ĭ-lăr'ĭ-tĭ), n. Physics. The occurrence or production of certain capillary effects by the action of an electric current or charge. See CAPILLARY ELECTROMETER. — e-lec'tro-cap'il-la-ry (-kăp'ĭ-lă-rĭ; -kă-pĭl'ȧ-rĭ; cf. CAPILLARY, a.), a.

e-lec'tro-chem'i-cal (-kĕm'ĭ-kăl), a. Also e-lec'tro-chem'ic. Of or pertaining to electrochemistry. — e-lec'tro-chem'i-cal-ly, adv. — electrochemical series, an electromotive series — e. telegraph. = CHEMICAL TELEGRAPH.

e-lec'tro-chem'is-try (-ĭs-trĭ), n. That branch of science which treats of the relation of electricity to chemical changes. In the various forms of electric cells, chemical change is productive of electricity; in electrolysis the reverse is true. Electrochemistry is of great practical importance, as in the manufacture of aluminium, alkalies, chlorine, phosphorus, etc., in electroplating, electrotyping, refining of metals, purification of sewage, etc. — e-lec'tro-chem'ist (-kĕm'ĭst), n.

e-lec'tro-chron'o-graph (-krŏn'ŏ-grăf), n. A chronograph consisting of an electromagnetic register connected with a clock. — e-lec'tro-chron'o-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-cul'ture (ē-lĕk'trŏ-kŭl'tŭr), n. Hort. The use of the electric light to promote the growth of plants. It has been found to hasten the flowering of many ornamental plants, as the Easter lily, but has thus far proved of little value in forcing vegetables, except in the case of lettuce.

e-lec'tro-cute (-kūt), v. t.; -CUT'ED (-kūt'ĕd); -CUT'ING (-kūt'Ing). [electro- + -cute as in execute.] To execute (a criminal) by electricity. — e-lec'tro-cu'tion (-kū'shŭn), n. — e-lec'tro-cu'tion-al (-ăl), a. — e-lec'tro-cu'tion-er (-ẽr), n.

☞ Electrocute is a hybrid formation of the same character as electrolier, cablegram, bureaucracy, etc.; it is considered by many to be inelegant, but is widely used and has no accepted equivalent.

e-lec'trode (ē-lĕk'trōd), n. [electro- + 2d -ODE.] Elec. Either terminal of an electric source; esp., either of the e-lec'tro-af-fin'i-ty, n. Electric affinity or attraction.

e-lec'tro-an'æs-the'si-a or -an'-es-the'si-a, n. [NL.] Med. Insensibility of the skin to the stimulus of the electric current.

e-lec'tro-bat, n. [electro- + Gr. -βατος, fr. βαίνειν to go.] An electromobile.

e-lec'tro-cau'ter-y, n. = GALVANOCAUTERY. [ELECTRO-.]

e-lec'tro-cop'per, v. t. To electroplate with copper.

conductors by which the current enters and leaves an electrolyte. See ANODE, CATHODE. An electrode may be a wire, a plate, or other conducting object. Frequently the metallic vessel in which an electrolyte is contained serves as one of the electrodes.

e-lec'trode-less (ē-lĕk'trōd-lĕs), a. Elec. Without electrodes. — electrodeless discharge, one produced, under certain conditions, through a gas in the neighborhood of an electric current.

e-lec'tro-dy-nam'ics (-dī-năm'ĭks; -dĭ-), n. The phenomena of electricity in motion; also, the science treating of the action of electric currents on themselves and on one another, and of the interaction of currents and magnets. Two simple laws form the basis of electrodynamics: (1) Two parallel currents having the same direction attract each other. (2) Two parallel currents having opposite directions repel each other. — e-lec'tro-dy-nam'ic (-năm'ĭk), e-lec'tro-dy-nam'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a.

e-lec'tro-gild' (-gĭld'), v. t. [electro- + gild, v.] To electroplate with gold. — e-lec'tro-gilt' (-gĭlt'), p. a.

e-lec'tro-graph (ē-lĕk'trō-grăf), n. [electro- + -graph.] a A record or tracing made by the action of electricity, as by an electrometer. b An apparatus, controlled by electric devices, used to trace designs for etching. c An instrument for the electric transmission of pictures, maps, etc. Cf. TELAUTOGRAPH. d An image made by the Röntgen rays; a sciagraph. e A cinematograph using the arc light.

e-lec'tro-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to an electrograph or electrography.

e-lec-trog'ra-phy (ē-lĕk-trŏg'ră-fĭ), n. 1. The art or process of making electrographs or using an electrograph. 2. = GALVANOGRAPHY.

e-lec'tro-ki-net'ics (ē-lĕk'trō-kī-nĕt'ĭks; -kĭ-nĕt'ĭks), n. Electrical science which treats of electricity in motion; — contrasted with electrostatics. — e-lec'tro-ki-net'ic (-ĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-lier' (-lēr'), n. [electro- + -lier as in chandelier.] A support for electric lamps, esp. one like a chandelier.

e-lec-trol'y-sis (ē-lĕk-trŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [electro- + -lysis.] Phys. Chem. Act or process of chemical decomposition by the action of the electric current; subjection to this process; as, the electrolysis of salts of silver or nickel; the electrolysis of water; the electrolysis of sewage.

e-lec'tro-lyte (ē-lĕk'trō-līt), n. [electro- + Gr. λυτός dissoluble.] Physics & Chem. A compound decomposable, or subjected to decomposition, by an electric current. Electrolytes in solution, esp. aqueous solution, conduct the current. According to the electrolytic theory this is explained by their dissociation into ions. Salts as a rule dissociate readily, acids and bases dissociate in various degrees; other substances do not conduct the current and are called nonelectrolytes. See ION.

e-lec'tro-ly'tic (-lĭt'ĭk) } a. Pertaining to electrolysis
e-lec'tro-lyt'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } or an electrolyte; deposited by electrolysis; as, electrolytic action; electrolytic copper. — e-lec'tro-lyt'i-cal-ly, adv.

electrolytic dissociation theory, the theory that the molecules of electrolytes in solution dissociate into ions. See ELECTROLYTE, ION. — e. interrupter, Elec., a kind of interrupter consisting essentially of a cell containing dilute acid and two electrodes, one consisting of a large lead plate and the other of a small piece of platinum wire. In use it is connected with the primary circuit of an induction coil without condenser, and an electrolytic action occurs which makes and breaks the current periodically. — e. meter. See METER, n.

e-lec'tro-lyze (ē-lĕk'trō-līz), v. t.; -LYZED (-līzd); -LYZ'ING (-līz'ĭng). [See ELECTROLYSIS.] To subject to electrolysis. — e-lec'tro-ly-za'tion (-lĭ-zā'shŭn; -lī-zā'shŭn), n.

e-lec'tro-lyz'er (-līz'ẽr), n. One that electrolyzes; an electrolyzing apparatus; specif., Med., an instrument for treating urethral strictures by electrolysis.

e-lec'tro-mag'net (-măg'nĕt; 151), n. A core of some magnetic material, in practice always soft iron, surrounded wholly or in part by a coil of wire through which an electric current is passed to magnetize it by electromagnetic induction. Electromagnets are used in practically all electrodynamic apparatus, and for lifting heavy masses of iron by magnetic attraction, etc.

Electromagnet. A A Current-carrying Coils; B Armature; C Load.

e-lec'tro-mag-net'ic (-măg-nĕt'ĭk), e-lec'tro-mag-net'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. Of, pert. to, or produced by, electromagnetism. — e-lec'tro-mag-net'i-cal-ly, adv. — electromagnetic cylinder. = SOLENOID. — e. engine, an electric motor. — e. induction. See INDUCTION. — e. stress, magnetic stress; stress due to forces of tension and compression existing in a magnetic field. — e. telegraph. See TELEGRAPH. — e. theory of light. See LIGHT.

e-lec'tro-mag'net-ism (-măg'nĕt-ĭz'm), n. 1. Magnetism developed by a current of electricity.

2. The branch of science treating of the physical relations between electricity and magnetism, as shown by development of magnetism by the electric current, the effect of magnets upon currents, etc. — e-lec'tro-mag'net-ist, n.

e-lec'tro-met'al-lur'gy (-mĕt'ăl-ûr'jĭ), n. That department of metallurgy employing the electric current, either for the electrolytic separation and deposition of metals from solutions, or as a source of heat in smelting, refining, welding, annealing, etc. — e-lec'tro-met'al-lur'gi-cal (ē-lĕk'trō-mĕt'ăl-ûr'jĭ-kăl), a. — e-lec'tro-met'al-lur'gist (-lĭst), n.

e-lec-trom'e-ter (ē-lĕk-trŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [electro- + -meter: cf. F. électromètre.] Elec. An instrument for measuring differences of potential; — also, sometimes, and less properly, applied to an instrument which indicates the presence of electricity (usually called an electroscope). Some of the better-known kinds of electrometers are the absolute (or balance), the capillary, the quadrant, and Lane's.

e-lec'tro-mo'bile (ē-lĕk'trō-mō'bĭl), n. An automobile driven by electricity. — e-lec'tro-mo'bil-ism (-bĭl-ĭz'm), n.

e-lec'tro-mo'tion (-mō'shŭn), n. Motion of electricity, as in a voltaic circuit; also, mechanical action produced by means of electricity.

e-lec'tro-mo'tive (-mō'tĭv), a. Pertaining to electromotion; producing, or tending to produce, electricity or an electric current; causing electrical action or effects.

electromotive force, Elec., the force which, by reason of differences in potential, produces electric currents; difference of potential; — abbr. E. M F. It is analogous to pressure in a water pipe due to difference of level. See VOLT. — e. series (of the metals), an arrangement of the metals in such order that each is displaced from the aqueous solution of its salts by those preceding, and displaces those following. The series for the principal metals is: potassium, sodium, barium, strontium, calcium, magnesium, alummium, manganese, zinc, chromium, cadmium, iron, cobalt, nickel, tin, lead, (hydrogen, arsenic,) copper, antimony, bismuth, mercury, silver, platinum, gold.

e-lec'tro-mo'to-graph (-mō'tō-grăf), n. [electro- + motograph.] An apparatus invented by Edison, consisting of a cylinder of chalk moistened with a solution of an electrolyte and pressed upon by an arm connecting with a diaphragm. If, while the cylinder rotates, a varying electric current passes between the arm and cylinder, variations in friction, and corresponding vibrations of the diaphragm, are produced. It is used as a telephone receiver.

e-lec'tro-mo'tor (-mō'tẽr), n. [Cf. F. électromoteur.] 1. Physics. A mover or exciter of electricity; an apparatus for generating a current of electricity.

2. = ELECTRIC MOTOR.

e-lec'tro-mus'cu-lar (-mŭs'kŭ-lăr), a. Physiol. Pertaining to the reaction (contraction) of the muscles under electricity, or their sensibility to it.

e-lec'tron (ē-lĕk'trŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἤλεκτρον. See ELECTRIC.] 1. a = ELECTRUM, 1. b = ELECTRUM, 2.

2. Physics & Chem. One of those particles, having about one thousandth the mass of a hydrogen atom, which are projected from the cathode of a vacuum tube as the cathode rays and from radioactive substances as the beta rays; — called also corpuscle. The electron carries (or is) a natural unit of negative electricity, equal to 3.4×10^{-10} electrostatic units. It has been detected only when in rapid motion; its mass, which is electromagnetic, is practically constant at the lesser speeds, but increases as the velocity approaches that of light. Electrons are all of one kind, so far as known, and probably are the ultimate constituents of all atoms (see ATOM). An atom from which an electron has been detached has a positive charge and is called a coelectron.

e-lec'tro-neg'a-tive (ē-lĕk'trō-nĕg'ă-tĭv), a. Physics & Chem. a Charged with negative electricity, having a tendency to pass to the anode in electrolysis; hence, acid, not basic. b Capable of acting as the negative element of a voltaic cell. See ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES.

e-lec'tro-neg'a-tive, n. Chem. & Physics. A body which passes to the anode in electrolysis, as oxygen.

e-lec-tron'ic (ē-lĕk-trŏn'ĭk), a. Physics & Chem. Of or pertaining to an electron or electrons.

e-lec'tro-ŏp'tics (ē-lĕk'trō-ŏp'tĭks), n. Physics. That part of physics which deals with the relations existing in general between electricity and light, thus including the electromagnetic theory of light, or, specif., with the optical phenomena of the electromagnetic and electrostatic fields. — e-lec'tro-ŏp'tic (-tĭk), -ŏp'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl), a. — e-lec'tro-ŏp'ti-cal-ly, adv.

e-lec'tro-pa-thol'o-gy (-pă-thŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. The employment and effects of electricity in pathological conditions.

e-lec-trop'a-thy (ē-lĕk-trŏp'ă-thĭ), n. [electro- + -pathy.] Med. The treatment of disease by electricity. — e-lec'tro-path'ic (ē-lĕk'trō-păth'ĭk), a.

e-lec-troph'o-rus (ē-lĕk-trŏf'ō-rŭs), n.; pl. -TROPHORI (-rī). [NL.; electro- + -phorous.] 1. Physics. An instrument for the production of electric charges by induction. It consists of a disk of resin, shellac, ebonite, or the like, and a metal plate. The disk having been negatively electrified by friction and the plate placed upon it, the latter becomes charged by induction. The repelled negative charge is then conducted away by momentary contact of the finger of the operator or by other convenient means, after which the plate, with its remaining positive charge, is removed by its insulating handle. This operation may be repeated indefinitely without renewing the charge upon the disk, since the source of the electrical energy is the mechanical work performed in separating the positively charged plate from the negatively charged cake.

Electrophorus. a Metal Plate; b Cake of Ebonite.

2. [cap.] Zoöl. See ELECTRIC EEL.

e-lec'tro-phys'i-ol'o-gy (ē-lĕk'trō-fĭz'ĭ-ŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. Physiol. That branch of physiology which treats of electric phenomena produced through physiological agencies. — e-lec'tro-phys'i-o-log'i-cal (-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — e-lec'tro-phys'i-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n e-lec'tro-plate' (ē-lĕk'trō-plāt'), v. t.; E-LEC'TRO-PLAT'ED (-plāt'ĕd); E-LEC'TRO-PLAT'ING (-plāt'ĭng). To plate or cover with an adherent coating of metal, commonly silver, nickel, or gold, by means of electrolysis.

e-lec'tro-plate', n. Something electroplated, or electroplated objects collectively.

e-lec'tro-plat'er (-plāt'ẽr), n. One that electroplates.

e-lec'tro-pneu-mat'ic (-nū-măt'ĭk), a. Pertaining to a combination of electrical and pneumatic effects; as, an electropneumatic signal, a signal operated by compressed air under an electrical control.

e-lec'tro-poi'on (ē-lĕk'trō-poi'ŏn), n., or electropoion fluid. [NL., electro- + Gr. ποιῶν, p. pr. of ποιεῖν to make.] Elec. An exciting and depolarizing acid solution used in certain cells or batteries, as the Grenet battery. Electropoion is best prepared by mixing one gallon of concentrated sulphuric acid diluted with three gallons of water, with a solution of six pounds of potassium bichromate in two gallons of boiling water. It should be used cold.

e-lec'tro-po'lar (-pō'lar), a. Physics. Possessing electrical polarity; positively electrified at one end, or on one surface, and negatively at the other; — said of a conductor.

e-lec'tro-pos'i-tive (-pŏz'ĭ-tĭv), a. Physics & Chem. a Charged with positive electricity (see ELECTRICITY); having a tendency to pass to the cathode in electrolysis; hence, basic, not acid. b Capable of acting as the positive element of a voltaic cell. See ELECTROMOTIVE SERIES.

e-lec'tro-pos'i-tive, n. Chem. & Physics. A substance which passes to the cathode in electrolysis, as potassium.

e-lec'tro-punc'ture (-pŭnk'tŭr), n. Med. An operation consisting in inserting needles into the part affected, and passing a galvanic current through them.

e-lec'tro-py-rom'e-ter (-pī-rŏm'ē-tẽr), n. An electric pyrometer. See PYROMETER.

e-lec'tro-re-cep'tive (-rē-sĕp'tĭv), a. Capable of receiving and making use of an electric current; — said of arc lamps, motors, electric heaters, etc.

e-lec'tro-scope (ē-lĕk'trō-skōp), n. [electro- + -scope. cf. F. électroscope.] 1. Physics. An instrument for detecting the presence of electricity, or changes in the electric state of bodies, or the species of electricity present, on the principle of electric attraction and repulsion. The simplest electroscope is a pith ball suspended by a silk thread. A common form is one in which two strips of thin foil or gold leaf are suspended from a conductor in a glass jar.

Electroscope. a Gold Leaves made to diverge by repelled electricity due to charged Rod c, an equal and opposite charge being attracted to Cap b.

2. = CINEMATOGRAPH, 1.

e-lec'tro-scop'ic (ē-lĕk'trō-skŏp'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to an electroscope.

e-lec'tro-sil'ver (-sĭl'vẽr), v. t. To electroplate with silver.

electrostatic induction. See INDUCTION. — e. pressure or stress, stress due to forces of tension and compression existing in the neighborhood of a charged body.

e-lec'tro-ste-nol'y-sis (-stē-nŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. Physics & Chem. The phenomenon of the deposition of certain metals from solution in capillary tubes during the passage of an electric current. — e-lec'tro-sten'o-lyt'ic (-stĕn'ō-lĭt'ĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-stric'tion (-strĭk'shŭn), n. [electro- + striction.] A deformation produced by electric stress, as the expansion of a Leyden jar on being charged.

e-lec'tro-sur'ger-y (-sûr'jẽr-ĭ), n. The employment of electricity for surgical purposes.

e-lec'tro-tax'is (-tăk'sĭs), n. [NL.; electro- + taxis.] Biol. The responsive movement of small organisms to the stimulus of the electric current. Cf. ELECTROTROPISM. It has been observed in lower forms of animal life, and in motile zoospores of some plants. — e-lec'tro-tac'tic (-tĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-tech'nics (-tĕk'nĭks), n. The technics of electricity. — e-lec'tro-tech'nic (-nĭk), e-lec'tro-tech'ni-cal (-nĭ-kăl), a.

e-lec'tro-tech-nol'o-gy (-tĕk-nŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. The science which treats of the practical applications of electricity.

e-lec'tro-tel-lu'ro-graph (-tē-lū'rō-grăf), n. [electro- + *tellu*ric + -graph.] Elec. An apparatus for the study of telluric (earth) currents.

e-lec'tro-ther'a-peu'tics (-thĕr'ă-pū'tĭks), n. Med. Use or science of electricity as a curative agent. — e-lec'tro-ther'a-peu'tic (-pū'tĭk), -ther'a-peu'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl), a.

e-lec'tro-ther'mal (-thûr'măl), a. [electro- + thermal.] Relating to, or combining, both heat and electricity; as, electrothermal bath; specif., Physics, pertaining to the generation of heat by electricity. Cf. THERMOELECTRIC.

e-lec'tro-ther'man-cy (-thûr'măn-sĭ), n. That branch of electrical science which treats of the effect of an electric current upon the temperature of a conductor, or on a part of a circuit composed of two different metals.

e-lec'tro-tint' (ē-lĕk'trō-tĭnt'), n. A mode of producing printing plates electrically by drawing on a flat metal surface with varnish or other nonconducting substance, electroplating so as to produce a coating on the exposed parts of the metal, and using the intaglio so produced to make a cast which is the plate for printing.

e-lec'tro-ton'ic (-tŏn'ĭk), a. 1. Physics. Pertaining to or designating a supposed state of electric tension. Obs.

2. Physiol. Relating to electrotonus; as, the electrotonic condition of a nerve.

e-lec'tro-di'ag-no'sis, n. Med. Diagnosis of disease by means of the reactions of muscles and nerves to the electric current.

e-lec'tro-trog'e-ny (ē-lĕk-trŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [electro- + -geny.] Physiol. The tetanic effect produced when a current of electricity is passed along the spinal cord or nerves. — e-lec'tro-gen'ic (ē-lĕk'trō-jĕn'ĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-hor'ti-cul'ture, n. = ELECTROCULTURE.

e-lec-trol'o-gy (ē-lĕk-trŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [electro- + -logy.] The science of electricity. Obs. or R. — e-lec'tro-log'ic (-trō-lŏj'ĭk), e-lec'tro-log'i-cal, a. — e-lec-trol'o-gist (ē-lĕk-trŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

e-lec'tro-mas-sage' (-mă-säzh'), n. Med. Massage combined with the application of electricity.

e-lec'tro-phore, n. [electro- + -phore.] = ELECTROPHORUS.

E-lec'tro-phor'i-dæ (ē-lĕk'trō-fŏr'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL. See ELECTRO; -PHOROUS.] See ELECTRIC EEL.

e-lec'tro-tha-na'si-a (ē-lĕk'trō-thă-nā'zhĭ-ă), n. [NL.; electro- + Gr. θάνατος death.] Death by electricity.

e-lec'tro-than'a-to'sis (-thăn'ă-tō'sĭs), n. [NL.] Electrothanasia.

e-lec'tro-ther'a-py (-thĕr'ă-pĭ), n. Med. Electrotherapeutics

e-lec'tro-ther'mic (-thûr'mĭk), e-lec'tro-ther-mom'e-tric (-thûr-mŏm'ē-trĭk), a. Electrothermal.

e-lec-trot'o-nize (ē-lĕk-trŏt'ō-nīz), v. t. Physiol. To cause or produce electrotonus in, as a nerve.

e-lec-trot'o-nus (-nŭs), n. [NL.; electro- + Gr. τόνος tension.] Physiol. The modified condition of a nerve when a constant current of electricity passes through any part of it. See ANELECTROTONUS, CATELECTROTONUS.

e-lec-trot'ro-pism (ē-lĕk-trŏt'rō-pĭz'm), n. [electro- + -tropism.] Plant Physiol. The tendency of plant organs, as roots, to describe curvatures under the influence of an electric current of moderate strength. — e-lec'tro-trop'ic (ē-lĕk'trō-trŏp'ĭk), a.

e-lec'tro-type (ē-lĕk'trō-tīp), n. [electro- + -type.] a A facsimile plate for use in printing, made by taking an impression in wax, depositing in this mold a thin shell of copper, or rarely other metal, by an electroplating process, and backing with type metal. The wax is rendered conducting for the electroplating by coating it with powdered graphite. b A print made from such a plate. c The process of producing such plates; electrotypy.

e-lec'tro-ty'po-graph (ē-lĕk'trō-tī'pō-grăf), n. An electrically operated typograph. — e-lec'tro-ty'po-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a.

2. An alloy of gold and silver, pale yellow in color, used by the ancients.

3. Min. Argentiferous gold, pale yellow to yellowish white in color.

4. German-silver plate. See GERMAN SILVER.

e-lec'tu-a-ry (-tū-ă-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [ME. letuarie, L. electuarium, prob. fr. Gr. ἐκλεικτόν, ἔκλειγμα, a medicine that is licked away, fr. Gr. ἐκλείχειν to lick up; ἐκ out + λείχειν to lick: cf. OF. lettuaire, F. électuaire. See LICK; cf. ECLEGM.] Pharm. A medicine composed of powders, or other ingredients, incorporated with honey or sirup so as to form a doughy or pasty mass. See CONFECTION, 2 a.

el'ee-mos'y-na-ry (ĕl'ē-mŏs'ĭ-nā-rĭ; ĕl'ē-ē-mŏs'- ; 277), a. [LL. eleemosynarius, fr. L. eleemosyna alms, Gr ἐλεημοσύνη. See ALMS.] 1. Relating or devoted to charity (which see, def. 7), alms, or almsgiving.

2. Given in charity or alms; having the nature of alms; as, eleemosynary assistance.

3. Supported by charity; as, eleemosynary poor.

eleemosynary corporation. See CORPORATION, 3.

2. One who subsists on charity; a dependent.

el'e-gance (ĕl'ē-găns), n. [L. elegantia, fr. elegans, -antis, elegant: cf. F. élégance.] 1. State or quality of being elegant; beauty as resulting from choice qualities and absence of what deforms or impresses unpleasantly; grace or finish given by art or practice; polish; refinement, — said of manners, language, style, form, etc.

> That grace that elegance affords. Drayton.

2. That which is elegant.

Syn. — ELEGANCE, GRACE. ELEGANCE always suggests refinement, polish, propriety, esp. as the result of breeding or nice selective instinct; GRACE, as here compared (see MERCY), is more commonly native than acquired; as, elegance of manners, diction; grace of movement, of bearing; "romantic grace and classic elegance" (Hazlitt).

> A girl .. with all the elegance and accomplishments which Mrs. Grant foresaw in her. Jane Austen.
> A woman . . . whose motion, whether rapid or slow, was always perfect grace. Thackeray.

el'e-gan-cy (-găn-sĭ), n.; pl. -GANCIES (-sĭz). Elegance. Now Rare, exc. in sense of: That which is elegant; instance or kind of elegance.

el'e-gant (-gănt), a. [L. elegans, -antis; akin to eligere to pick out, choose, select: cf. F. élégant. See ELECT.] 1. Displaying fastidious care, as of the person; marked by, or addicted to, niceties of manner, dress, custom, or the like; as, an elegant hostess; elegant society.

2. Marked by careful and tasteful selection or execution; characterized by grace, propriety, and refinement; as, an elegant style; elegant furnishings; an elegant vase; — usually said of the products of human art, and sometimes connoting a degree of artificiality or overrefinement.

3. Marked by finish and simplicity; neat and apt; as, the syllogism is an elegant illustration of reasoning.

4. Keenly discriminative or appreciative of what is elegant; as, a person of elegant tastes.

5. Admirable; excellent; fine; as, an elegant steak. Vulgar.

Syn. — Tasteful, polished, graceful, refined, comely, handsome, richly ornamental, fine.

e-le'gi-ac (ē-lē'jĭ-ăk; ĕl'ē-jī'ăk; 277), a. [L. elegiacus, Gr. ἐλεγειακός: cf. F. élégiaque. See ELEGY.] 1. Gr. Lit. Designating, or pertaining to, the development of Greek poetry succeeding the epic period, characterized by use of the elegiac meter. This meter was invented by the Ionian poets, and was used not only for elegies commemorative of the dead, but also for martial, gnomic, and even erotic themes. It continued to be cultivated after all other forms of Greek poetry had disappeared.

2. Of, belonging to, or written in, elegy or elegiacs; plaintive; expressing sorrow or lamentation; as, elegiac strains; writing, or having written, elegies; as, an elegiac poet.

> Elegiac griefs, and songs of love. Mrs. Browning.

3. Used in, or suited to, elegies; as, elegiac verse; the elegiac distich or couplet, consisting of a dactylic hexameter and (so-called) pentameter, as follows (see PROSODY):

e-le'gi-ac (ē-lē'jĭ-ăk; ĕl'ē-jī'ăk; 277), n. 1. Elegiac verse: a The "elegiac pentameter," of which the scheme is that of the second verse of the elegiac couplet; — so called because it was anciently scanned $- \smile\smile | - \smile\smile | - - | \smile\smile | \smile\smile -$. b pl. A series of elegiac distichs; a poem or poems in such verse.

el'e-gi-am'bic (ĕl'ē-jĭ-ăm'bĭk), a. Gr. & Lat. Pros. Consisting of, pertaining to, or designating, an elegiambus. — n. An elegiambus.

el'e-gi-am'bus (-bŭs), n.; pl. -BI (-bī). [LL. See ELEGY; IAMBUS.] Gr. & Lat. Pros. A verse compounded of half an elegiac pentameter (two dactyls and a long syllable) and an iambic dimeter. Thus: $- \smile\smile | - \smile\smile | - \times \# \smile - | \smile - | \smile - | \smile -$.

e-le'git (ē-lē'jĭt), n. [L., he has chosen, fr. eligere to choose. See ELECT.] Law. A judicial writ of execution (given by the Statute of Westminster II.) by which a defendant's goods are appraised and delivered to the plaintiff, and, if necessary, all (originally only a moiety) of his lands are delivered, to be held till the debt is paid by the rents and profits, or until the defendant's interest has expired. Now by statute in England the goods can no longer be taken, and the creditor may have the land sold. The writ also is still in use in some States of the United States.

el'e-gize (ĕl'ē-jīz), v. t. & i.; EL'E-GIZED (-jīzd); EL'E-GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). To lament or celebrate in elegy.

el'e-gy (-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [L. elegia, Gr. ἐλεγεία, fem. sing. (cf. ἐλεγεῖα, prop. neut. pl. of ἐλεγεῖον a distich in elegiac verse), fr. ἐλεγεῖος elegiac, fr. ἔλεγος a song of mourning: cf. F. élégie.] 1. A mournful or plaintive poem; a funereal song; a poem of lamentation.

2. Elegiac verse, or any poem in such measure.

3. Music. A composition of pensive or mournful character.

e-le'i-din (ē-lē'ĭ-dĭn), n. Physiol. Chem. A substance, believed to be an intermediate stage in the formation of keratin, found in small granules (staining deeply with hæmatoxylin) in the cells of the stratum granulosum of the epidermis.

el'e-me, or el'e-mi, figs (ĕl'ē-mĭ). [Turk. eleme anything cleaned by sifting.] A brand of Smyrna figs of superior quality, packed flat.

el'e-ment (ĕl'ē-mĕnt), n. [F. élément, L. elementum.] 1. One of the simple substances or principles of which, according to early natural philosophers, the physical universe is composed. The aim of the earliest Greek philosophy was to discover some type of being, or principle of matter, to which all forms of physical existence might be reduced. Thales believed this element to be water; for Anaximander it was "the moist;" for Anaxagoras it was air; for Heraclitus, a kind of ethereal fire. Empedocles maintained that there are four elements, earth, air, fire, and water, and these were the four elements generally recognized up to modern times. Aristotle added a fifth element, ether, as that of the stars and the heavenly spheres, and many allusions in literature are to this celestial element, "the element" being used for the sky, the welkin (for example, Shakespeare, "2 Henry IV.," IV. iii. 58; "Julius Cæsar," I. iii. 128, cf. "Twelfth Night," III. i. 65).

> The grosser feeds the purer: Earth the Sea;
> Earth and the Sea feed Air; the Air those Fires > Ethereal. Milton
> Does not our life consist of the four elements? Shak.

2. Hence: a One of the four elements in its natural form or occurrence; as, the watery element, i. e., water; — often, in allusion to the ocean, "the element" (cf. def. 1). "Mere element for drink." Cheyne. b pl. Conditions of weather viewed as activities of the elements, now usually implying violent or severe weather; as, to trust one's self to the elements, lightning, rain, and wind are tempestuous elements. c One of the four elements viewed as a natural habitat; as, water is the element of fishes, air that of birds; hence, the state or sphere natural or suited to any person or thing; as, to be in, or out of, one's element.

3. Chem. One of a limited number of distinct varieties of matter which, singly or in combination, compose every material substance; specif., in modern chemistry, a substance which cannot be separated into substances different from itself, at least by ordinary chemical processes. The conception of elements was very uncertain among the alchemists and iatrochemists; Lully, for example, supposed all things to be composed of mercury and sulphur. The term was first given its definite modern meaning by Boyle, since whose time the list of elements has undergone a long process of revision and extension. Those at present recognized are naturally classified in several families or groups, as the group of the alkaline elements, the halogen group, and the like. They are roughly divided into two great classes, the metals, as sodium, calcium, etc., which form basic compounds, and the nonmetals or metalloids, as oxygen, sulphur, chlorine, which form acid compounds; but the distinction is only relative, and some, as arsenic, tin, aluminium, etc., form both acid and basic compounds. The essential fact regarding every element is its relative atomic weight or equivalent. When the elements are tabulated in the order of their ascending atomic weights, the arrangement constitutes the series of the periodic law of Mendeleyeev. See PERIODIC LAW. This law enables us to predict the qualities of unknown elements. The number of elements known is about eighty, but the gaps in the periodic law indicate the possibility of many more. Many of the elements with which we are familiar, as hydrogen, carbon, iron, gold, etc., have been recognized, by means of spectrum analysis, in the sun and the fixed stars. In formulas, the elements are designated by abbreviations of their names in Latin or Modern Latin. Boyle himself did not consider the elements, as he defined the term, to be the ultimate constituents of matter. Certain indirect evidence, as that afforded by the periodic law and by spectrum analysis, has long lent strength to the view that the chemical elements may be only very stable compounds of some simpler substance or substances. Recent radioactive discoveries seem to furnish direct evidence as to this, certain elements having apparently been observed in the process of disintegrating and being transformed into other elements. This process is quite different from ordinary chemical processes. See RADIUM, ATOM, ELECTRON. In view of these disintegrations, if the definition of element as "a substance which cannot be separated into substances different from itself" were to be strictly applied, certain substances long recognized as elements could no longer be so called; but as the term element, in its accustomed usage, stands for a true order of chemical magnitude, so to speak, there is little doubt that the eighty odd substances belonging to this order will continue to be called elements regardless of their atomic transformations. The following list of elements is that prepared for 1912 by an international committee of chemists, the atomic weights being given on the basis, oxygen = 16.00. See ATOMIC WEIGHT. There are certain other elements which have been announced, which are not included here because their existence or properties are not regarded as sufficiently established. Some of them, as actinium, coronium, and holmium, will be found in the Vocabulary.

4. Astron. One of the celestial spheres of the ancient astronomy; one of the heavenly bodies. Obs.

5. One of the constituent parts, principles, materials, or traits of anything; that is: one of the relatively simple forms or units which enter variously into a complex substance or thing (as, bricks are elements of a wall; cells are elements of living bodies; quartz, feldspar, and mica are elements of granite); or one of the simplest parts or principles of which anything consists or into which it may be analyzed; as, sensations are elements of consciousness.

> Simplicity, which is so large an element in a noble nature. Jowett (Thucyd.).

6. Hence, pl.: a The letters of the alphabet; — a Latin use. Obs. b The simplest or fundamental principles of any system in philosophy, science, or art; rudiments; as, the elements of geometry or of music. c Any outline or sketch regarded as containing the fundamental ideas or features of the thing in question; as, the elements of a plan. d Eccl. The bread and wine used in the Eucharist.

7. Math. a An infinitesimal part of any magnitude of the same nature as the entire magnitude; as, in a solid an element may be the infinitesimal portion between any two parallel planes indefinitely close together. In the calculus, a differential. b The generatrix of a curve, or surface, or volume considered as described by a moving point, or curve, or surface. c One of the terms in an algebraic expression, esp. in a determinant. d Of a class, any entity that satisfies the test or condition of that class.

8. One of the necessary data or values upon which a system of calculations depends, or general conclusions are based; as, the elements of a planet's orbit.

9. Kinematics. Either of the components of a pair. See CHAIN, n., 8, Illust.

10. Elec. Either of the pieces of metal or other substances constituting a voltaic couple; also, a voltaic couple; a cell. See CELL, n., 4.

Syn. — See COMPONENT.

el/e-phant (ĕl'ē-fănt), n. [ME. elefaunt, olifant, OF. olifant, elefant, F. éléphant, L. elephantus, elephas, -antis, fr. Gr. ἐλέφας, -αντος; of unknown origin; cf. Skr. ibha, Heb. aleph ox, Goth. ulbandus camel, AS. olfend.] 1. Any mammal of the group Proboscidea and genus Elephas. There are two existing species and a number of extinct ones, among which is the mammoth. In a wider sense the term includes any member of the family Elephantidæ. They are the largest existing land animals. The snout is prolonged into a muscular proboscis capable of the most varied movements and serving as a prehensile organ. The teeth are very few. There are two incisors in the upper jaw, developed, especially in the male, into long tusks, which furnish most of the ivory of commerce. The molar teeth are very large and have many transverse ridges. Usually but two molars are developed at a time on each side of each jaw, and these are replaced as they wear out. The feet are short and rounded and have five toes. The head is very large, chiefly owing to the amount of diploic tissue. The brain is well developed, exceeding in actual size that of man, and elephants are very intelligent. They may live for much more than a century, and the period of gestation is nearly two years. The Indian elephant (E. indicus) is found in India, Ceylon, and some of the larger Malayan islands. This is the only species which is often tamed and trained, and is the one most commonly seen in shows, but it does not breed freely in domestication, and the stock has to be kept up by the capture of wild individuals. The white elephant is only a partially albino variety of this species. The African elephant (E. africanus), now confined to Central Africa, stands somewhat taller and has a straighter back and enormous ears. The extinction of both species, unless far greater efforts are made to preserve them, is only a matter of time. The extinct species were much more widely distributed, occurring in Europe, northern Asia, North America, and parts of South America. See MAMMOTH, MASTODON.

elephant beetle. a Any of several very large lamellicorn beetles of the family Scarabæidæ, esp. Megasoma elephas of Central America, which attains a length of five inches and bears a forked upwardly curved horn on the front of the head. b A weevil or snout beetle.
elephant creeper. Bot. A convolvulaceous plant (Rivea speciosa), of the East and West Indies, bearing funnel-shaped rose-colored flowers, and having the leaves silvery white beneath. The leaves are used to allay inflammation.
el/e-phant–ear' fern A polypodiaceous fern (Hymenodium crinitum) of the West Indies, having large simple fronds densely clothed with hairlike scales.
elephant fish. A chimæroid fish (Callorhynchus callorhynchus), with a proboscislike projection of the snout.
elephant grass. An Old World cat-tail or reed-mace (Typha elephantina), ranging from southern Europe to the East Indies. Its leaves are used in making baskets, etc. In India the pollen is made into bread.

el/e-phan'ti-ac (ĕl/ē-făn'tĭ-ăk), a. [L. elephantiacus.] Med. Affected with, or characteristic of, elephantiasis.

el/e-phan-ti'a-sis (-făn-tī'ā-sĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἐλεφαντίασις, from ἐλέφας, -αντος, an elephant.] Med. A disease of the skin, in which it becomes enormously thickened, and is rough, hard, and fissured, like an elephant's hide. It is produced by inflammation and obstruction of the lymphatics, and affects chiefly the legs and external genitals. It is endemic in tropical regions, where its frequent association with the presence of a parasitic worm (Filaria sanguinis hominis) in the blood has been demonstrated.

el/e-phas (ĕl'ē-făs), n. [NL., fr. L. elephas elephant, Gr. ἐλέφας.] Zoöl. The genus consisting of the typical elephants, as the two existing species and the mammoth.

El/et-ta'ri-a (ĕl/ē-tā'rĭ-ā), n. [NL., fr. native name.] Bot. A genus of East Indian zinziberaceous plants containing a single species, E. cardamomum, furnishing cardamom seeds. It is a tall herb with lanceolate sheathing leaves and small purple-striped flowers in a long spike.

El/eu-si'ne (ĕl/ū-sī'nē), n. [NL., fr. Gr. Ἐλευσίνη the goddess Ceres.] Bot. A genus of grasses with digitate or rarely scattered spikes consisting of many-flowered spikelets. The 6 species are chiefly of tropical distribution, but E. indica, the yard grass, is a cosmopolitan weed. E. coracana is a valuable grain in India and Africa. See RAGGEE.

El/eu-sin'i-a (-sĭn'ĭ-ă), n. pl. [L., fr. Gr. Ἐλευσίνια, prop. neut. pl. of Ἐλευσίνιος. See ELEUSINIAN.] Gr. Antiq. A festival, originally quinquennial, later also triennial, celebrated at Eleusis in honor of Demeter and Persephone, with equestrian, gymnastic, and musical contests. In imperial times, at least, this festival followed directly after the Eleusinian mysteries; and the name Eleusinia came to be applied to the two functions taken together.

El/eu-sin'i-an (-sĭn'ĭ-ăn), a. [L. Eleusinus, Gr Ἐλευσίνιος.] Of or pertaining to the ancient city of Eleusis, in Attica, or designating, or relating to, the Eleusinian mysteries, the most famous of the religious mysteries of the ancient world. They originated at Eleusis, probably under Cretan influence, in prehistoric times, and after the conquest of Eleusis by Athens were made a part of the Athenian state religion, though the rites remained in charge of the Eumolpides and Keryces, ancient families of Eleusis. They were celebrated yearly in historic times. The Lesser Mysteries, held at Agræ, a suburb of Athens, in Anthesterion (Feb.-March), were concerned with legends of Dionysus and Kore (Persephone) and were probably devoted to a purification of candidates for the Greater Mysteries, held in Boëdromion (Sept.-Oct.). These began, on the 13th, with the departure from Athens of the ephebi, who on the next day returned from Eleusis with the sacra. The 15th to the 19th were occupied with ceremonies which included the Ἅλαδε μύσται ("to the sea, mystæ") at which the candidates bathed in the sea. On the 19th occurred the great procession to Eleusis, the day being known as Iacchus from the cry raised by the marchers who bore an image of this god (Bacchus, or Dionysus). The initiation proper occurred between the 20th and 23d, and comprised purifications, fasts, and the witnessing of rites or sacred dramas portraying the legend of Demeter and Kore. To initiates of the second degree, the epoptæ, as distinguished from the mystæ, was probably reserved the representation of the sacred marriage (of Zeus and Demeter). Initiation was believed to insure happiness in the future world, and doubtless included the imparting of formulæ to be used by the soul on its passage thither. Eventually Eleusinian mysteries were given at other centers, as Megalopolis, Ephesus, Andania in Messenia. Cf. ORPHIC MYSTERIES.

El/eu-sin'i-on (ĕl/ū-sĭn'ĭ-ŏn), n. [Gr. Ἐλευσίνιον.] The temple or hall at Eleusis where the mysteries were enacted.

El/eu-the'ri-a (-thē'rĭ-ă), n. pl. [Gr. ἐλευθέρια (τά). See ELEUTHERIAN.] Gr. Relig. A festival instituted after the battle of Platæa (B. C. 479) in honor of Zeus Eleutherios (the Deliverer), and celebrated there with athletic contests every fourth year.

El/eu-the'ri-an (ĕl/ū-thē'rĭ-ăn), a. [Gr. ἐλευθέριος, fr. ἐλεύθερος free] Delivering; making free; — applied to Zeus Eleutherios. See ELEUTHERIA.

El/eu-the'ri-os (-ŏs), n. [L. Eleutherius, fr. Gr. Ἐλευθέριος the Deliverer.] An epithet of Dionysus, and of Zeus.

e-lim'i-nant, n. 1. Med. An eliminant agent.
2. Math. A function of the coefficients of n homogeneous equations connecting n symbols, the result of eliminating the symbols, vanishing (only) when the equations are consistent; — De Morgan's term, equiv. to Bezout's resultant.
e-lim'i-nate (ē-lĭm'ĭ-nāt), v. t.; -NAT'ED (-nāt'ĕd), -NAT'ING (-nāt'ĭng). [L. eliminatus, p. p. of eliminare; e out + limen threshold; prob. akin to limes boundary. See LIMIT.] 1. To put out of doors; to thrust out, hence, to make known; divulge; also, to set at liberty; release. Obs.

Eliminate my spirit, give it range Young.

2. To get rid of, as by expulsion; to throw out; expel; exclude; — often with an implication of functional process as in the physiological and algebraic uses. See defs. 4 & 5.

Eliminate errors that have been gathering Lowth

3. To set aside as unimportant in a process of inductive inquiry; to ignore.
4. Physiol. To separate; to expel from the system; to excrete; as, the kidneys eliminate urea, the lungs carbonic acid; to eliminate poison from the system.
5. Alg. To cause to disappear from an equation; as, to eliminate an unknown quantity or a function.
6. To obtain by separating, as from foreign matters; to deduce; educe; disengage. Not well authorized.
Syn. — See EXCLUDE.
e-lim'i-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. Act of eliminating, or state of being eliminated; specif.: a Physiol. Act of discharging or excreting waste products or foreign substances through the various emunctories. b Alg. Act of making a quantity disappear from an equation; esp., the operation of deducing from several equations containing several unknowns a less number of equations containing a less number of unknowns. c Symbolic Logic. The removal of logical quantities, or their symbols, by combining or transforming logical equations. — elimination of chance, elimination in which we do not eliminate any one assignable cause, but the multitude of floating unassignable ones. J. S. Mill.
e-lim'i-na-tive (ē-lĭm'ĭ-nā-tĭv), a. Physiol. Relating to, or carrying on, elimination.
el'i-quate (ĕl'ĭ-kwāt), v. t.; -QUAT'ED (-kwāt'ĕd); -QUAT'ING (-kwāt'ĭng). [L. eliquatus, p. p. of eliquare to clarify, strain; e + liquare to liquefy, melt.] 1. To melt; liquefy. Obs.
2. Metal. a To liquate; smelt. b To part by liquefaction.
el'i-qua'tion (ĕl'ĭ-kwā'shŭn), n. [L. eliquatio.] a Liquefaction. Obs. b = LIQUATION, n., 2.
e-li'sion (ē-lĭzh'ŭn), n. [L. elisio, fr. elidere, elisum, to strike out. See ELIDE.] 1. Division; separation. Obs. Bacon.
2. A cutting off or suppression, esp. of a vowel or syllable, for the sake of meter or euphony; in poetry, the dropping of a final vowel before an initial vowel in the next word.
el'i-sor (ĕl'ĭ-zẽr; ē-lī'zẽr; 277), n. [F. éliseur, fr. élire to choose, L. eligere. See ELECT.] 1. An elector. Obs.
2. Law. A person appointed by a court to return a jury, serve a writ, or perform other duties of the sheriff or a coroner in case of his disqualification.
‖ é'lite' (ā'lēt'), n. [F., fr. élire to choose, L. eligere. See ELECT.] 1. A choice or select body; the flower; as, the élite of society.
2. [cap.] Switz. See ARMY ORGANIZATION.
e-lix'ir (ē-lĭk'sẽr), n. [LL., fr. Ar. el-iksīr the philosopher's stone, prob. from Gr. ξηρός dry, (hence probably) a dry powder; cf. Skr. kshā to burn: cf. F. élixir, Sp. elixir.]
1. Alchemy. A substance thought to be capable of transmuting metals into gold; also, one for prolonging life indefinitely; as, elixir vitæ, or the elixir of life.
2. A strong extract or tincture. Obs. or Hist.
3. Pharm. A tincture with more than one base; a compound tincture or medicine, composed of various substances, held in solution by alcohol in some form. Elixirs as they are known in modern American pharmacy are aromatic, sweetened, spirituous preparations, containing small quantities of active medicinal substances. U. S. Disp.
4. The refined spirit; the quintessence.

The . . . elixir of worldly delights. South.

2. See TANNHÄUSER.

Pertaining to Queen Elizabeth or her times; as, the Elizabethan writers, drama, literature. — n. One who lived in England in the time of Queen Elizabeth.

Elizabethan style, Arch., a late Gothic or early Renaissance style combining Tudor and Italian features, common in country houses of Elizabeth's reign. Characteristic details are the large windows, long galleries, tall decorated chimneys, and a profusion of ornamental strapwork.

elk (ĕlk), n. [Of uncertain origin; akin to Icel. elgr, Sw. elg, AS. eolh, OHG. elaho, MHG. elch; cf. L. alces, and E. eland.] a In Europe, the largest existing deer (Alces alces) of Europe and Asia, having broad palmate antlers. It is hardly more than subspecifically distinct from the moose of North America, but does not grow so large. It is found in parts of Scandinavia, Germany, Russia, and Siberia. Cf. IRISH ELK. b In America, the wapiti. c In India, any of certain large deer, as the sambur.

elk bark. The bark of the sweet bay (Magnolia virginiana), or of the great-leaved magnolia (M. macrophylla); also, either of these trees.

elk'-horn' fern. A form of the common stag-horn fern.

elk'wood' (-wo͝od'), n. a The sorrel tree. b The soft wood of the umbrella tree (Magnolia tripetala), or the tree.

ell (ĕl), n. [AS. eln; akin to D. el, elle, G. elle, OHG. elina, Icel. alin, Dan. alen, Sw. aln, Goth. aleina, L. ulna elbow, ell, Gr. ὠλένη elbow. Cf. ELBOW, ALNAGE.] A measure, chiefly for cloth, now little used. It is of different lengths in different countries, the English ell being 45 inches, the old Dutch or Flemish ell about 27, the Scotch about 37, the Danish 24.7, the Jersey ell 48. The present ell, or el, of the Netherlands is the meter (39.37 inches).

el-lag'ic (ĕ-lăj'ĭk), a. [F. ellagique, fr. galle gall (with the letters reversed).] Chem. Pertaining to, or designating a crystalline acid found in bezoar stones, oak galls, oak bark, etc., and obtained also by oxidation of gallic acid.

El'lers-hau'sen proc'ess (ĕl'ẽrs-hou'zĕn). Metal. A process in which molten iron from the blast furnace is partially refined by passing through troughs lined with oxides.

El'li-ot piv'ot (ĕl'ĭ-ŭt). A short vertical pivot fitting in a bifurcated end, used as a steering pivot in one form of Ackermann axle.

el-lipse' (ĕ-lĭps'), n. [Gr. ἔλλειψις defect (see CONIC SECTION): cf. F. ellipse. See ELLIPSIS.] 1. Geom. A plane curve variously defined as: the path of a point the sum of whose distances from two fixed points (the foci) is constant; the parallel projection or shadow of a circle on a plane; a conic section, the closed intersection of a plane with a right circular cone; or a compressed circle all of whose parallel half chords perpendicular to a diameter have been shortened in the same ratio, of the minor to the major or transverse axis (the unchanged diameter).

APCA'QB'A Ellipse. AA' Major Axis (= 2 a); A, A' Vertices; BB' Minor Axis (= 2 b); O Center; F, F' Foci; DR, D'R' Directrices; A'PA'Q' Auxiliary Circle; P, Q Points on Ellipse; P', Q' Corresponding Points on Auxiliary Circle found by producing ordinates SP and NQ; Angle P'OS (= e) Eccentric Angle of P; Lines FP, PF', Focal Distances of P, FQ, QF', of Q, etc. Ellipse may be defined by the following equations: (1) $FP + PF' = \frac{1}{2}C + CF' = FQ + QF' = \ldots = AA'$. (2) $FP : PD = FQ : QE = F'C : CD' = F'Q : QE' = FA : AX = F'A' : A'X' = \ldots = e$ (the eccentricity of the ellipse). (3) $PS : P'S = BO : GO = QN : Q'N = e\ (= BO : OA$, that is $b : a$). (4) $\frac{x^2}{a^2} + \frac{y^2}{b^2} = 1$ where $x =$ distance of any point from the η axis (BOB') measured parallel to the x axis ($A'OA$) (OS for point P) and y is the other coördinate (PS for point P).

2. The (nearly) elliptical orbit of a planet.

el-lip'sis (ĕ-lĭp'sĭs), n.; pl. ELLIPSES (-sēz). [L., fr. Gr. ἔλλειψις a leaving, defect, fr. ἐλλείπειν to leave in, fall short; ἐν in + λείπειν to leave. See IN, LOAN; cf. ELLIPSE.] 1. Gram. Omission from a construction of one or more words, which are obviously understood, but must be supplied to make the expression grammatically complete; as, "virtues I admire," instead of "virtues which I admire."

2. Geom. An ellipse. Obs.

3. Print. A mark or marks, as . . . or * * *, showing omission of letters or words.

el-lip'so-graph (-sō-grăf), n. [ellipse + -graph; cf. F. ellipsographe.] A trammel for describing ellipses.

el-lip'soid (ĕ-lĭp'soĭd) } a. Pertaining to, or resem-el'lip-soi'dal (ĕl'ĭp-soĭ'dăl) } bling, an ellipsoid; as, ellipsoid or ellipsoidal form.

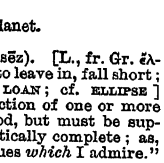
el-lip'soid (-soid), n. [ellipse + -oid; cf. F. ellipsoïde.] Geom. A surface all plane sections of which are ellipses or circles. See CONOID, n., 1 a. It is a compressed sphere, all half chords perpendicular to one central plane being shortened in the ratio $b : a$, and all perpendicular to a second central plane, perpendicular to the first, in the ratio $c : a$, when a is the radius of the original sphere. It is divided by these two planes and a third, perpendicular to both, into eight congruent octants; these planes make three principal sections and meet in pairs on the three axes.



Ellipsoid. $OA = a$; $OB = b$; $OC = c$.

Bessel's ellipsoid, Clarke's ellipsoid, etc., Math., tentative spheroids of various dimensions, approximating the geoid, or shape of the earth, that have been proposed as bases of reference. They are named from their proposers, as Bessel's ellipsoid (1841), Clarke's (1858, 1866, 1880), Harkness's (1891), Bonsdorff's (1899), Shdanov's (1899), etc., of which the compressions are · 1/299.15, 1/280.4, 1/295, 1/293.5, 1/300.2, 1/298.6, 1/299.7. — ellipsoid of expansion, Math., that into which a strain deforms an elementary sphere in the body strained. — e. of gyration, Math., one in which the central perpendicular on a tangent plane equals the radius of gyration of a certain body about that perpendicular. — e. of inertia. = ELLIPSOID OF GYRATION. — e. of revolution, a spheroid; a figure generated by the revolution of an ellipse about one of its axes, called prolate or oblate according as the revolution is round the major or the minor axis.

el-lip'tic (ĕ-lĭp'tĭk) } a. [Gr. ἐλλειπτικός: cf. F. elliptique.]
el-lip'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } que. See ELLIPSIS.] 1. Of or pertaining to an ellipse; having the form of an ellipse; oblong, with rounded ends; specif., having two characteristic elements imaginary, as are the asymptotes of an ellipse.

2. Pertaining to ellipsis; having a part omitted, as, an elliptical phrase.

elliptic arch. Arch. a An arch whose intrados is an ellipse or approximates more or less closely to one. See ARCH, Illust. (9). — e. chuck. See CHUCK, n., 4. — e. compasses, an instrument for drawing ellipses. — e. conoid, Math., an ellipsoid. — e. coordinates. See COÖRDINATE, n., 2 (11). — e. curve, one of the genus 1. See GENUS. — e. epicycloid, Math., a so-called epicycloid, in which, however, the fixed curve and the rolling curve are equal ellipses. — e. functions, Math., doubly periodic functions (inverses of elliptic integrals), the higher analogues of trigonometric functions. — e. geometry, Math., the geometry of elliptic space. — e. integral, Math., the integral as to x of a function rational in x and the second root of a polynomial of third or fourth degree in x; — so called because one such expresses the length of an arc of an ellipse. — e. involution, Math., one whose foci are imaginary, the product of the central distances of two conjugate points being negative. — e. modular function, an automorphic function in which the constants, a, b, c, d, are integers and $ad - bc = \pm 1$; more generally, one in which these constants, though not integral, form, with their transformations a discrete group. — e. motion, motion of a point in an ellipse such that a radius vector to one of the foci describes equal areas in equal times. — e. point (of a surface), Math., a synclastic point. — e. polarization. See POLARIZATION, 2, Note. — e. space. Math. a A space in which the Riemannian measure of curvature, $\frac{1}{k^2}$, is positive. It has the properties: (1) Every straight line in it is closed; (2) the sum of the angles in any triangle exceeds a straight angle; (3) two straight lines that meet once meet only once (in which case the space is simply elliptic) or meet twice (in which case the space is doubly elliptic). b Analogous two-dimensional space viewed as complete in itself, having internal relations, but no external relations, like position or sides. c The area bounded by an ellipse. — e. spheroid. See ELLIPSOID OF REVOLUTION. — el-lip'ti-cal-ly, adv. — el-lip'ti-cal-ness, n.

el'lip-tic'i-ty (ĕl'ĭp-tĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. [Cf. F. ellipticité.] Deviation of an ellipse or a spheroid from the form of a circle or a sphere; esp., in reference to the figure of the earth, the difference between the equatorial and polar semidiameters, divided by the equatorial (rarely by the polar); thus, the ellipticity of the earth is $\frac{1}{299}$; compression.

2. [cap.] The three stars called Orion's Belt; — usually King's, or Our Lady's, Ellwand. Scot.

elm (ĕlm), n. [AS. elm; akin to D. olm, OHG. elm, G. ulme, Icel. almr, Dan. & Sw. alm, L. ulmus, and E. alder.] 1. Any tree of the genus Ulmus. The elms are mostly of large size and graceful habit; the American elm (U. americana) and the English elm (U. campestris) are much planted for shade. Elm wood is very hard and tough, and is much used for implements and furniture. Cf. WYCH ELM, CORK ELM, SLIPPERY ELM, etc.; see ULMUS.

Elm (Ulmus americana). a Mature Leaves; b Staminate Flowers, c Young Fruit.

2. The wood of the elm.

3. Any of several trees or shrubs with elmlike foliage; as: a In the West Indies, Cordia gerascanthus and C. gerascanthoides, of the Boraginaceæ; and Hamelia ventricosa, of the Rubiaceæ. b In Australia, Aphananthe philippinensis and Trema aspera, both of the elm family.

elm beetle. Any of several beetles that feed on the leaves of the elm, esp. the imported leaf beetle Galerucella luteola, a yellowish brown chrysomelid beetle with indistinct dark stripes, native of Europe, but now very troublesome in the Atlantic States, and spreading westward. It is combated by spraying the trees with an arsenical solution.

Elm Leaf Beetle (Galerucella luteola). a Imago; b Pupa; c Larva. × 2.

elm sawfly. A large sawfly (Cimbex americana). The larva, which is white with a black dorsal stripe, feeds on the leaves of the elm.

elm'y (ĕl'mĭ), a. Abounding with elms.

e-loc'u-lar (ē-lŏk'ū-lăr), a. [e- + locular.] Having but one cell, or cavity; not divided by a septum.

em-bar'rass (ĕm-băr'ăs), v. t.; EM-BAR'RASSED (-răst); EM-BAR'RASS-ING. [F. embarrasser (cf. It. imbarazzare, Sp. embarazar, Pg. embaraçar, Pr. barras bar); em- (L. in) + LL. barra bar. See BAR.] 1. To hinder from freedom of thought; to perplex, discompose; disconcert; as, laughter may embarrass an orator.

2. To hinder from liberty of movement; to impede; hence, to complicate, as, affairs are embarrassed.

3. Com. To involve in difficulties concerning money matters; —said of a person or his affairs; as, a man or his business is embarrassed when he cannot meet his obligations.

Syn.—Mortify, shame; discompose, upset, put out, nonplus, dumfound.—EMBARRASS, ABASH, DISCONCERT, DISCOMFIT, CONFUSE, CONFOUND, agree in the idea of a derangement, usually sudden, of one's mental processes. EMBARRASS implies some influence which impedes one's freedom of thought, speech, or action, with resulting uneasiness or constraint; as, to be embarrassed in the presence of strangers ABASH (see bashful, under SHY) adds to embarrass the implication of utter loss of self-possession, often from a sudden sense of inferiority or shame; as, a young writer may be abashed in a great author's presence. DISCONCERT suggests such loss of presence of mind or disturbance of poise as leaves one for the moment nonplused, as, a disconcerting question. DISCOMFIT regards as permanent the state which disconcert describes as momentary; as, to discomfit an overconfident opponent. CONFUSE (as here compared, see PUZZLE) and CONFOUND imply temporary (and in the case of confound, complete) suspension of all one's powers (esp. that of speech; compare dumfounded), often from some amazing or overwhelming revelation; as, to confuse one's faculties by a sudden shock, to confound a criminal by the discovery of his crime. Abash, confound, and (as here compared) confuse are somewhat bookish terms. See SURPRISE, VEXATION.

2. A visible sign of an idea; an object, or the figure of an object, symbolizing and suggesting another object, or an idea, by natural aptness or by association; a figurative representation; a symbol; as, a balance is an emblem of justice; a scepter, the emblem of sovereignty or power. "His cicatrice, an emblem of war." Shak.

3. A picture accompanied with a motto, a set of verses, or the like, intended as a moral lesson or meditation. In the 17th century much attention was given to the composition of such emblems, and many collections were published.

Syn. — Sign, device, badge, figure, image, prototype. — EMBLEM, SYMBOL, TYPE, TOKEN agree in the idea of a significant representation. An EMBLEM is a visible object representing another by a natural suggestion of characteristic qualities, or by a habitual or recognized association; as, a circle, having no beginning or end, is an emblem of eternity, the dove is the emblem of peace, a flag is the emblem of its country; "Like emblems of infinity the trenched waters run from sky to sky" (Tennyson). A SYMBOL may be entirely arbitrary or conventional (as in the case of algebraic, astronomical, typographical symbols, and the like); as a synonym for emblem (with which it is often interchangeable, as, "Be still a symbol of immensity; a firmament reflected in a sea," Keats) the word frequently suggests profounder or more recondite significance; as, "In a symbol there is concealment and yet revelation. . . . The universe is but one vast symbol of God" (Carlyle). TYPE, as here compared, stresses the idea of representative character, and often implies prefigurement (compare antitype); as, "one mind, the type of all, the moveless wave whose calm reflects all moving things that are" (Shelley); Joshua was a type of Christ. TOKEN is a symbol which serves esp. as a memorial or a guarantee; as, "I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth" (Gen. ix. 13); "Give me some token for the surety of it" (Shak.). See PROTOTYPE, PATTERN, SIGN.

em'blem, v. t. To represent by an emblem; to image.

I fancy, he did not think that the poor image his own hands had made was God; but that God was emblemed by it, that God was in it some way or other. Carlyle.

em'bry-o (ĕm'brĭ-ō), n.; pl. EMBRYOS (-ōz). [Formerly also embryon, Gr. ἔμβρυον, perh. fr. ἐν in (akin to L. & E. in) + βρύειν to be full of, swell with: cf. F. embryon.]
1. Biol. A young organism in the early stages of development. In most animals the embryonic period is commonly regarded as beginning with the cleavage of the egg and continuing until the animal emerges from the egg membrane or hatches. In mammals and other viviparous vertebrates embryo is applied only to early stages passed within the mother's body; later (in human embryology usually after the fifth week of development) the young is called a fetus. A generally prevailing characteristic of metazoan embryos is the early differentiation of the cells into the germ layers (see GERM LAYER) Cf. LARVA, OVUM.
2. Bot. In seed plants, the young sporophyte resulting from the union of male and female sex cells organized respectively by the pollen grain and the embryo sac. The embryo develops to a considerable extent immediately after fertilization and then undergoes a resting period in the seed until the so-called "germination" of the latter. In most seeds it may be clearly observed and its parts discerned under magnification. In this sense the embryo is often called a germ. See SEED, EMBRYOGENY, GERMINATION.

1 Seed of Arborvitæ (Thuja) showing Embryo, 2 The same, sprouting; 3, 4 The Embryo further advanced. c Cotyledon; p Plumule; h Hypocotyl; r Radicle.

3. A beginning or undeveloped stage of anything; a thing thought out, but not formed.
in embryo, in an incipient or undeveloped state; in conception, but not yet executed. "The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo." Swift.
em'bry-o, a. Incipient; embryonic; in the first stages of development; as, an embryo bud.
embryo cell. Bot. In seed plants, one of the two cells into which the egg divides after fertilization, giving rise to the embryo, the other cell developing the suspensor.
em'bry-og'e-ny (ĕm'brĭ-ŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [embryo + root of Gr. γενναν to produce.] Biol. The formation of the embryo and its course of development. Among plants, embryogeny may be direct or homoblastic, and indirect or heteroblastic. In the former case the embryo resembles the parent form and produces a similar adult individual, in the latter it differs often widely from the adult form, which it bears as a lateral outgrowth. Thus the moss plant springs from a filamentous embryo, the protonema, and in the seed plants the embryo sporophyte is developed at the extremity of an elongated body termed the suspensor. See EMBRYO; -PHYTE: see also A- not; EMBRYOPHYTA SIPHONOGAMA.] Bot. In the system of Engler and Prantl, one of four great divisions of the vegetable kingdom, coordinate with the Myxophyta and Thallophyta on the one side, and with the Embryophyta siphonogama on the other. It includes all archegoniates, and is practically coextensive with what are frequently called the vascular cryptogams, in which fertilization is accomplished not by means of a pollen tube, but by motile spermatozoids. See ARCHEGONIATÆ.
Em'bry-oph'y-ta si'pho-nog'a-ma (sī'fŏ-nŏg'ȧ-mȧ). [NL. siphonogama; Gr. σίφων, -ωνος, tube + -γαμος marrying. em'i-nen-cy (-nĕn-sĭ), n. [See EMINENCE.] State of being eminent; eminence, elevation; distinction; superiority.

em'i-nent (-nĕnt), a. [L. eminens, -entis, p. pr. of eminere to stand out, be prominent; e out + minere (in comp.) to project; of uncertain origin: cf. F. éminent. Cf. IMMINENT.] 1. High; lofty; towering; prominent. "A very eminent promontory." Evelyn.
2. Being, metaphorically, above others, whether by birth, high station, merit, talent, or virtue; high in public estimation; distinguished; conspicuous; as, an eminent statesman, or saint.
3. Standing out clearly; evident; as, eminent fairness.
Syn. — Noted, famous, renowned, marked, conspicuous, prominent, signal. — EMINENT, DISTINGUISHED, CELEBRATED, ILLUSTRIOUS. One is EMINENT who stands high as compared with others, esp. those of one's own calling or profession; DISTINGUISHED, who has received conspicuous public recognition; CELEBRATED, who is widely and favorably spoken of (implying less discriminating judgment than distinguished); ILLUSTRIOUS, who has won high prestige, esp. through splendid attainments or services. See FAMOUS, PROMINENT, REPUTATION.

eminent domain, Law, that superior dominion of the sovereign power over all the property within the state which authorizes it to appropriate all or any part thereof to a necessary public use, reasonable compensation being made. The obligation to give compensation is considered by the best authorities as being incident to the right of eminent domain, and not an imposed limitation. The right of eminent domain is usually carefully distinguished from that of taxation and the police power. In Great Britain the compulsory acquisition of land for public or semipublic purposes is governed by statute, and is called compulsory purchase in England; in Scotland the transaction is called a compulsory surrender. Some consider an analogous right, wider than angaria (which see, def. c), to exist in international law for one nation to appropriate the territory or property of another as a necessary measure of self-protection; but such a doctrine is not generally recognized.

2. In an eminent or high degree; notably.
3. Philos. In or to a measure or grade beyond correspondence or equivalence.

e-mir' (ĕ-mēr'; ā'mēr, 277), e-meer' (ĕ-mēr'), n. [Ar. emīr, amīr, commander: cf. F. émir. Cf. ADMIRAL, AMEER.] An Arabian military commander, independent chieftain, or ruler of a province; also, an honorary title given to the descendants of Mohammed, in the line of his daughter Fatima; among the Turks, likewise, a title of dignity, given to certain high officials.

em'is-sa-ry (ĕm'ĭ-sȧ-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [L. emissarius, fr. emittere, emissum, to send out. See EMIT.] 1. An agent employed to further certain interests or to gain information; esp., a disguised or secret agent.
2. [L. emissarium.] An outlet, canal, or duct, for conveying a fluid outward, as water from a lake.
Syn. — EMISSARY, SPY, SCOUT. An EMISSARY is an agent (commonly secret) appointed either to detect the schemes of an opposing party, or to influence their councils, or both; the word is commonly used in a bad sense; as, "It has been the constant practice of the Jesuits to send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several prevailing sects among us" (Swift); "by buzzing emissaries fills the ears of listening crowds with jealousies and fears" (Dryden). A SPY is properly one who enters an enemy's camp or territories in disguise, to obtain information; the term is one of opprobrium; as, "Ye are spies; to see the nakedness of the land ye are come" (Gen. xlii 9); "Thou hast put thyself upon this island as a spy, to win it from me" (Shak.). A SCOUT, as here compared, is a soldier sent out without disguise, usually at some hazard, to gain information; the word is not used in a derogatory sense; as, "as when a scout, through dark and desert ways with peril gone all night, . . . obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill" (Milton).

em'is-sa-ry (ĕm'ĭ-sȧ-rĭ), a. 1. Pertaining to, or acting as, an emissary; exploring; spying.
2. Anat. Designating specif. the veins which pass out of the cranium through apertures in its walls connecting the sinuses of the dura mater with the veins outside of the skull.

e-mis'sion (ĕ-mĭsh'ŭn), n. [L. emissio: cf. F. émission. See EMIT.] 1. Act of emitting, an issuing; emanation; as, the emission of light from the sun; the emission of heat from a fire; the emission of bank notes.
2. That which is emitted; discharge.

e-mis'sive (ĕ-mĭs'ĭv), a. 1. Sending out; emitting; as, emissive powers.
2. Sent out; emitted. Obs.

em'is-siv'i-ty (ĕm'ĭ-sĭv'ĭ-tĭ), n. Tendency to emission; comparative facility of emission, or rate at which emission takes place; specif., Physics, the rate of emission of heat from a bounding surface per degree of temperature difference between the surface and the surrounding substances (called by Fourier the external conductivity).

e-mit' (ĕ-mĭt'), v. t.; E-MIT'TED; E-MIT'TING. [L. emittere to send out; e out + mittere to send. See MISSION.] 1. To send forth; to throw or give out or off; to cause to issue; to give vent to; to eject; discharge; as, fire emits heat and smoke; boiling water emits steam; the sun emits light.
2. To issue, as an order or decree; to print and send into circulation, as notes or bills of credit.

No State shall . . . emit bills of credit. Const. of the U. S.

e-mit', v. i. To flow out; to issue.

em'me-tro'pi-a (ĕm'ĕ-trō'pĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. ἔμμετρος in measure, proportioned, suitable (ἐν in + μέτρον measure) + ὤψ, ὠπός, eye.] Med. The normal refractive condition of the eye, in which the rays of light are all brought accurately and without undue effort to a focus upon the retina so that vision is perfect; — opposed to hypermetropia, myopia, and astigmatism. — em'me-trop'ic (-trŏp'ĭk), a.

em'o-din (ĕm'ŏ-dĭn), n. Chem. An orange-red crystalline purgative, $C_{15}H_{10}O_5$, obtained from aloes, buckthorn, rhubarb, etc., and regarded as a derivative of anthraquinone; — so called from the rhubarb Rheum emodi.

e-mol'lient (ĕ-mŏl'yĕnt; -ĭ-ĕnt), a. [L. emolliens, -entis, p. pr. of emollire to soften; e out + mollire to soften, mollis soft: cf. F. émollient. See MOLLIFY.] Softening; making supple; acting as an emollient.

e-mol'lient, n. Med. A softening or soothing application to allay irritation, soreness, etc.

e-mol'u-ment (ĕ-mŏl'ū-mĕnt), n. [L. emolumentum exertion, profit, perh. fr. emolere to grind up (cf. MILL), or emoliri to move out, work out; e out + moliri to set in motion, exert one's self (cf. DEMOLISH): cf. F. émolument.] 1. Profit from office, employment, or labor; compensation; perquisites, fees, or salary.
2. Advantage; benefit. Obs.
Syn. — See WAGES.

e-mo'tion (ĕ-mō'shŭn), n. [L. emovere, emotum, to remove, shake, stir up; e out + movere to move. cf. F. émotion. See MOVE.] 1. Migration; movement from one place to another. Obs.
2. An agitation, disturbance, or tumultuous movement, whether physical or social. Obs
3. Any of the feelings of joy grief, fear, hate, love, awe, reverence, etc.; any of the feelings aroused by pleasure or pain, activity or repose, in their various forms, or the type of consciousness characterized by such feelings. Emotion is consciousness attendant upon other forms of consciousness (as perception or ideation) to which it gives their feeling tone (cf. TONE); and emotions are separable and classifiable apart from these other forms because the same object of thought may at different times have a different feeling tone, as a person may be now loved, now hated. Sensations of pain and pleasure pass insensibly into pure emotion. As compared with affection and feeling, emotion is a narrower term in psychology, though in nontechnical usage both of these terms have the narrower meanings. See AFFECTION, 2, 4; FEELING, 4, 8.

Some vague emotion of delight. Tennyson.

Syn. — See FEELING.

e-mo'tion-al (-ăl), a. 1. Pertaining to, or characterized by, emotion; easily moved; as, an emotional nature.
2. Appealing to, or arousing, emotion; as, emotional art.

em'per-or (ĕm'pẽr-ẽr), n. [OF. empereor, empereour, F. empereur, L. imperator, fr. imperare to command; in in + parare to prepare, order. See PARADE; cf. IMPERATIVE, EMPRESS.] 1. The sovereign or supreme monarch of an empire, orig. of the Roman Empire, whether as undivided, or, after A. D. 395, of either the Western or Eastern (Byzantine) Empire; later, the titular sovereign of the Holy Roman Empire, or various other countries, esp. of wide territory, as China, India, etc.; a title of sovereignty regarded as superior to that of king; as, the Emperor (Czar) of Russia. In general, an emperor is the holder of a sovereignty extending over conquered or confederated peoples, a king is ruler of a single people. Thus the "King of Prussia" is "German Emperor (Ger. Deutscher Kaiser)," the "King of England" is "Emperor of India." Cf. EMPIRE.
2. A size of paper. See PAPER.
Emperor of Believers, Omar I. en-. [F. en-, L. in.] A prefix signifying in, into, forming verbs : 1. From nouns, en- having the sense of put into or upon, hence sometimes, cover with, wrap up in ; as, encoach, to seat in a coach ; engold, to gild.

2. From nouns or adjectives, en- having the general sense of make, make into, or make like ; as, engolden, to make golden ; engloom, to make gloomy.

3. From other verbs, mostly transitive, en- adding sometimes an additional sense of in, but oftener a mere intensive force. In verse en- is often prefixed to a verb for the sake of the additional syllable.

☞ En- occurs chiefly in words from the French, and in analogical formations in English. En- generally becomes em- before p, b, and m, as in employ, embody, emmew. Many words were formerly, and some are still, written indifferently with en- or in-, as in enclose, inclose. See IN-.

en- (ĕn-). A prefix from Greek ἐν, in, meaning in ; as, encephalon, entomology. See IN-.

-en (-ĕn ; -'n). [ME , fr. AS. -an.] The suffix formerly used to form the plural of many nouns, as in ashen, eyen, oxen, all of which are now obsolete or dialectic except oxen. In some cases, such as children and brethren, it has been added to older plural forms.

-en. [AS. -en ; akin to Skr. -na.] The past-participle ending of many strong verbs ; as in broken, sunken, spoken.

-en. [AS. -en ; akin to Goth. -eins, L. -inus, Gr. -ινος.] An adjective suffix meaning made of, added chiefly to nouns denoting material ; as in golden, leaden, wooden. These adjectives were formerly common, but with the modern attributive use of nouns (as in a gold cup, a wheat cake) many have become obsolete or poetic ; as wheaten, oaken. They are still freely formed in dialect English.

-en. [AS. -nian.] A suffix meaning to make, to render (of a given character or quality), used to form verbs from nouns and adjectives ; as in quicken, frighten, strengthen. Such verbs are sometimes intransitive ; as, lengthen, to grow long.

en-a′ble (ĕn-ā′b'l), v. t. ; EN-A′BLED (-b'ld) ; EN-A′BLING (-blĭng). 1. To make able ; to give (one) power, strength, or competency, sufficient for the purpose ; as, money enables one to live in ease ; also, to render efficient or capable, in a general sense or degree ; as, ambition enables a person in the struggle of life.

2. To make possible, practicable, or easy ; as, steam and electricity enable rapid transit.

en'do-cœ'lar (ĕn'dō-sē'lar), a. [endo- + Gr. κοίλος hollow.] Zool. Pertaining to the visceral surface of the cœlom; splanchnopleural.

en'do-cy'cle (ĕn'dō-sī'k'l), n. [endo- + cycle.] Bot. An internal pericycle, a layer of parenchymatous tissue found in certain stems, separating the internal phloëm from the internal endodermis.

en'do-cyst (-sĭst), n. [endo- + -cyst.] Zool. The soft layer of the body wall of Polyzoa, lining the ectocyst. It consists of ectoderm with a more or less definite layer of mesoderm.

en'do-derm (-dûrm), n. [endo- + -derm.] 1. Zool. The epithelium lining the greater part of the digestive tract and those organs formed as diverticula of the digestive tract; the tissue derived from the hypoblast of the embryo. See GERM LAYER. When endoderm is applied to embryonic structures it is strictly synonymous with hypoblast, and the two terms are often used interchangeably of adult tissues also. Entoderm is also a synonym.

2. Bot. = ENDODERMIS.

en'do-der'mal (-dûr'măl) } a. Biol. Pertaining to, or deen'do-der'mic (-dûr'mĭk) } rived from, the endoderm or endodermis.

en'do-der'mis (-mĭs), n. [NL. See ENDODERM.] Bot. The innermost layer of the cortex. It consists of a single layer of cells forming a sheath around the stele or around each stele if there are more than one. It is most prominent in certain roots and rhizomes, separating parenchymatous from vascular tissue. — en'do-der'moid (-moid), a.

en-dog'a-my (ĕn-dŏg'ă-mĭ), n. [endo- + -gamy.] Marriage only within the group or clan; — opposed to exogamy. — en'do-gam'ic (ĕn'dō-găm'ĭk). — en-dog'a-mous (ĕn-dŏg'ă-mŭs), a.

en'do-gas-tri'tis (ĕn'dō-găs-trī'tĭs), n. [NL.; endo- + gastritis.] Med. Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the stomach.

en'do-gen (ĕn'dō-jĕn), n. [F. endogène. See ENDO- ; -GEN.] Bot. A plant of the class Endogenæ.

En-dog'e-næ (ĕn-dŏj'ē-nē), n. pl. [NL. See ENDOGEN.] Bot. A once generally recognized class of seed plants including the monocotyledons; — so named by Lindley on an incorrect supposition that the growth of the stem proceeded from within. Cf. EXOGENÆ.

en-dog'e-nous (-nŭs), a. 1. Biol. a Developed internally; growing from within, as the branches of a primary root. b Designating the formation of new cells or spores within the wall of the parent cell.

2. Bot. Pertaining to an endogen. See ENDOGENÆ.

en-dog'e-ny (-nĭ), n. [endo- + -geny.] 1. Biol. Growth from within, endogenous cell formation.

2. Anthropol. = ENDOGAMY.

en'do-lymph (ĕn'dō-lĭmf), n. [endo- + lymph.] Anat. The watery fluid in the membranous labyrinth of the ear.

en'do-morph (-môrf), n. [endo- + -morph.] Min. A crystal of one species inclosed within one of another, as one of rutile inclosed in quartz.

en'do-mor'phic (-môr'fĭk), a. 1. Petrog. Occurring within; internal; — said of changes, such as the formation of finer grain, new minerals, etc., experienced by the intrusive rock in contact metamorphism. Opposed to exomorphic.

2. Min. Of or pertaining to an endomorph.

en'do-mys'i-um (-mĭz'ĭ-ŭm; -mĭs'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; endo- + Gr. μῦς a muscle.] Anat. The delicate areolar connective tissue interspersed among muscular fibers within the smallest bundles. — en'do-mys'i-al (-ăl), a.

en-doph'a-gy (ĕn-dŏf'ă-jĭ), n. [endo- + Gr. φαγεῖν to eat.] Anthropol. Cannibalism within the family or tribe. Cf. EXOPHAGY. — en-doph'a-gous (-gŭs), a.

en'do-phyte (ĕn'dō-fīt), n. [endo- + -phyte.] Bot. A plant which grows within another plant, upon which it may or may not be parasitic. — en'do-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a. — en'do-phyt'i-cal-ly (-fĭt'ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

en-doph'y-tous (ĕn-dŏf'ĭ-tŭs), a. Zoöl. Living within the tissues of plants, as certain insects or larvæ.

en'do-plasm (ĕn'dō-plăz'm), n. [endo- + -plasm.] Biol. The inner or central portion of the cytoplasm in a cell; — opposed to ectoplasm. — en'do-plas'mic (-plăz'mĭk), a.

en'do-pleu'ra (ĕn'dō-plōō'rȧ; 243), n. [NL.; endo- + πλευρά rib, side. See PLEURA.] Bot. The inner coating or integument of a seed; — also called tegmen. — en'do-pleu'ral (-răl), a.

en-dop'o-dite (ĕn-dŏp'ō-dīt), n. [endo- + Gr. πούς, ποδός, a foot.] Zool. The mesial or internal branch (borne upon the protopodite) of a typical limb of a crustacean. In the thoracic limbs of Decapoda it forms the limb, no exopodite being developed. — en-dop'o-dit'ic (-dĭt'ĭk), a.

En'do-proc'ta (ĕn'dō-prŏk'tȧ), n. pl. [NL.; endo- + Gr. πρωκτός the anus.] Zool. A subclass of Polyzoa characterized by having the anus opening inside the circlet of tentacles. It contains but few genera. Pedicellina is an example. Cf. ECTOPROCTA. — en'do-proc'tous (-tŭs), a.

En'dop-ter'y-go'ta (ĕn'dŏp-tĕr'ĭ-gō'tȧ), n. pl. [NL.; endo- + Gr. πτέρυξ, -υγος, wing.] Zool. A primary division of true insects consisting of those whose wings first appear as invaginations and develop for a time inside the body. It comprises ninety per cent of existing insects, including the Lepidoptera, Coleoptera, Diptera, Hymenoptera, and others, and is opposed to Exopterygota, in which the wings begin (and always remain) as external folds. — en'dop-ter'y-got'ic (-gŏt'ĭk), a. — en'dop-ter'y-go'tism (-gō'tĭz'm), n. — en'dop-ter'y-go'tous (-tŭs), a.

end'-or'gan, n. Physiol. An organ forming the terminus of a path of conduction for nervous excitations; esp., a peripheral terminus; as, the eye is the end-organ of sight.

en-dorse' (ĕn-dôrs'), v. t.; EN-DORSED' (-dôrst'); EN-DORS'ING. [Formerly endosse, fr. F. endosser to put on the back, to endorse; en- (L. in) + dos back, L. dorsum. See DORSAL.] To write on the back of; to sanction, etc. See INDORSE.

en-dorse', n. Her. A subordinary, resembling the pale, but of one fourth its width (according to some, one eighth), usually borne two at a time, on either side of a pale.

en-dorsed' (ĕn-dôrst'), a. Her. a Addorsed. b Put between two endorses; — said of a pale. c Thrown back; — said of wings.

en'do-sal'pin-gi'tis (ĕn'dō-săl'pĭn-jī'tĭs), n. [NL.; endo- + salpingo- + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the Fallopian tube.

en'do-sarc (ĕn'dō-särk), n. [endo- + Gr. σάρξ, σαρκός, flesh.] Zool. The central, usually semifluid, part of the protoplasm of some unicellular organisms, as the amœba; endoplasm. — en'do-sar'cous (-sär'kŭs), a.

en'do-scope (-skōp), n. [endo- + -scope.] Med. An instrument for examining the interior of a hollow organ, as of the rectum, the urethra, and the bladder.

en-dos'co-py (ĕn-dŏs'kō-pĭ), n. Med. Examination with the endoscope. — en'do-scop'ic (ĕn'dō-skŏp'ĭk), a.

en'do-skel'e-ton (ĕn'dō-skĕl'ē-tŭn), n. [endo- + skeleton.] Anat. & Zoöl. An internal skeleton or supporting framework in an animal; — opposed to exoskeleton. The greater part of the skeleton of most vertebrates is of this nature, yet it is usually more or less extensively supplemented by, and often intimately united with, parts of exoskeletal origin. See EXOSKELETON. — en'do-skel'e-tal (-tăl), a.

en'do-sperm (ĕn'dō-spûrm), n. [endo- + -sperm.] Bot. The nutritive tissue formed within the embryo sac in seed plants; — formerly called albumen. It is often consumed by the embryo before the seed ripens, but in some plants, as wheat and other cereals, a quantity remains in the seed, to which it gives its food value. It arises by division of the definitive nucleus in the embryo sac, and is thought to function as the female prothallium or gametophyte in the seed plants. — en'do-sper'mic (-spûr'mĭk), a.

en'do-spo'ri-um (ĕn'dō-spō'rĭ-ŭm; 201), n.; pl. -RIA (-ȧ). [NL.] Bot. The inner layer or coating of the spore wall.

en-dos'te-al (ĕn-dŏs'tē-ăl), a. Anat. a Of or pertaining to endostosis or the endosteum. b Within a bone or cartilage. — en-dos'te-al-ly, adv.

en-dos'te-i'tis (ĕn-dŏs'tē-ī'tĭs), en'do-sti'tis (ĕn'dō-stī'tĭs), n. [NL.; endosteum + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the endosteum.

en-dos'te-um (ĕn-dŏs'tē-ŭm), n.; pl. -TEA (-ȧ). [NL.; endo- + Gr. ὀστέον a bone.] Anat. The layer of vascular connective tissue lining the medullary cavities of bone.

en-dos'to-ma (-tō-mȧ), n. [NL.; endo- + -stoma.] 1. Zoöl. A plate which supports the labrum in certain Crustacea.

2. Med. A tumor within a bone.

en'do-stome (ĕn'dō-stōm), n. [See ENDOSTOMA.] 1. Bot. a The foramen of the secundine, or inner coating of the ovule. b In mosses, the inner portion of the peristome.

2. Zoöl. An endostoma.

en'dos-to'sis (ĕn'dŏs-tō'sĭs), a. [NL.; endo- + ostosis.] Anat. Ossification beginning in the substance of a cartilage.

endir. † ENDER.
endirken † ENDARK.
en-dite' † INDICT, INDITE.
en'dite, n. [Gr. ἔνδον within.] Zool. One of the appendages of the inner, or mesial, side of the limb of a phyllopod crustacean.
end'lang'. Obs. or Scot. and dial. Eng. var. of ENDLONG.
end lathe. = FACE LATHE.
end leaf; pl. END LEAVES Bookbinding. A flyleaf. end'lich-ite (ĕn'dĭ'lĭk-īt), n. [After Dr F. M. Endlich.] A mineral, between mimetite and vanadinite, consisting of lead arsenate, vanadate, and chloride.
end'ly, a. Final; extreme. Obs. end'ly, adv. Finally; extremely. Obs. [TERITIS.
en'do-sa'te-ri'tis, n. = ENDARen'do-blast, n. [endo- + -blast.] Biol. Hypoblast. — en'do-blas'tic, a.
en'do-bron-chi'tis, n. [NL.; endo- + bronchitis.] Med. Inflammation of the epithelial lining of the bronchi.
en'do-can'ni-bal-ism, n. = ENDOPHAGY. [al. Rare.
en'do-car'di-ac, a. Endocardien'do-car'poid, a. Bot. In lichenology, having the apothecia immersed in the thallus.
en'do-cone', n. [endo- + cone.] Paleon. One of the concentric conical structures developed within the calcareous siphuncle of certain cephalopod shells, as those of the genus Endoceras.
en'do-cor'tex, n. [endo- + cortex.] The inner cortex. [UM.
en'do-crane, n. = ENDOCRANI-en'do-cra-ni'tis (ĕn'dō-krā-nĭ'tĭs), n. [NL.] Med. Inflammation of the endocranium.
en'do-cra'ni-um, n. [NL.; endo- + cranium.] a Zool. A process of the inner surface of the cranium of certain insects. b Anat. The inner surface of, or the dura mater of, the cranium. — en'do-cra'ni-al, a.
en-doc'trine, v. t. [F. endoctriner.] To indoctrinate. Obs.
En'do-cyc'li-ca (ĕn'dō-sĭk'lĭ-kȧ; -sĭ'klĭ-kȧ), n. pl. [NL.] = REGULARIA, order of sea urchins. — en'do-cyc'lic (-sĭk'lĭk; -sĭ'klĭk). en'do-cyc'li-cal, a.
en'do-cy'e-mate (-sī'ē-māt), a. Embryol. Entocyemate.
en'do-don-ti'tis (-dŏn-tī'tĭs), n. [NL.; endo- + odonto- + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the lining membrane of a tooth.
en'do-gas'tri-cal-ly (ĕn'dō-găs'trĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. Zool. Toward the ventral side of the body; — said of the manner of coiling of the shell prevailing in Gastropoda.
en'do-gen'e-sis, n. [endo- + -genesis.] Biol. Endogeny.
en'do-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a. = ENDOGENOUS, 1. [DOGENOUS.

en'do-glob'u-lar, a. [endo- + globular] Situated within the blood corpuscles.
en'dog-nath (ĕn'dŏg-năth), n. [endo- + Gr. γνάθος jaw.] Zool. The inner or principal branch of the oral appendages of Crustacea. — en-dog'na-thal (ĕn-dŏg'nā-thăl; ĕn'dŏg-năth'ăl), a.
en'do-go-nid'i-um, n.; pl. ENDOGONIDIA. [NL.; endo- + 2d gonidium.] Bot. A gonidium formed in a receptacle. Gobel.
en'do-la-ryn'ge-al (ĕn'dō-lă-rĭn'jē-ăl; -lā'rĭn-jē'ăl), a. Pert. to the inside of the larynx. — en'do-la-ryn'ge-al-ly, adv.
en'do-lem'ma, n. [NL.; endo- + Gr. λέμμα skin.] Neurilemma.
en'do-lith, n. [endo- + -lith.] Art. A colored design on a slab of marble or ivory cut from a block permeated with a color. — en'do-lith'ic (-lĭth'ĭk), a.
en'do-lym-phan'gi-al, a. [endo- + lymphangial.] Anat. Within a lymphatic vessel.
en'do-lym-phat'ic, a. [endo- + lymphatic.] Anat. a Pertaining to or containing endolymph. b Endolymphangial.
en'do-lym'phic (-lĭm'fĭk), a. Anat. Endolymphatic. Rare.
endomage. † ENDAMAGE.
en-dome', v. t. To cover with or as if with a dome. Rare.
en'do-me'ri-sion, n. Optics. See IMMERSION LENS.
en'do-me-tri'tis (ĕn'dō-mē-trī'tĭs), n. [NL. See ENDOMETRIUM; -ITIS.] Med. Inflammation of the endometrium.
en'do-me'tri-um (-mē'trĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; endo- + Gr. μήτρα the womb.] Anat. The mucous membrane lining the uterus. — en'do-me'tri-al (-ăl), a.
en-dom'e-try (ĕn-dŏm'ē-trĭ), n. [endo- + -metry.] Med Measuring of the interior of a cavity.
En'do-par'a-sit'i-ca (ĕn'dō-păr'ă-sĭt'ĭ-kȧ), n. pl [NL. See PARASITE.] = DIGENETICA.
en'do-path'ic, a. [endo- + pathic, a.] = AUTOPATHIC en'do-per'i-car-di'tis (-pĕr'ĭ-kär-dī'tĭs), n. [NL.; endo- + pericardium + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of both endocardium and pericardium.
en'do-pe-rid'i-um, n.; pl. -PERIDIA (-ȧ). [NL.; endo- + peridium.] Bot. The inner peridium when the latter has two layers, as in the puffballs. — en'do-pe-rid'i-al (-ăl), a.
en'do-phle-bi'tis (-flē-bī'tĭs), n. NL.] Med. Inflammation of the inner coat of a vein.
en'do-phlœ'um (-flē'ŭm), n. [NL.; endo- + Gr. φλοιός bark.] Bot. The inner layer of the bast in woody stems. Rare.
en'do-phragm (ĕn'dō-frăm), n. [endo- + Gr. φράγμα a fence.] Bot. & Zool. A septum; specif., Zool., one formed by the apodemes of the thoracic region of Crustacea. — en'do-phrag'mal (-frăg'măl), a.
en'do-phrag'ma (-frăg'mȧ). Var. of ENDOPHRAGM.
en'do-phy'tal (-fī'tăl), a. Endophytic.
en'do-plas'ma, (-plăz'mȧ), n. [NL.] Endoplasm en'do-plast, n. [endo- + -plast.] Biol. a A cell nucleus, esp. of a protozoan. b The cytoplasm. R. — -plas'tic (-plăs'tĭk), a.
en'do-plas'tron, n. [endo- + plastron.] = ENTOPLASTRON.
en'do-plas'tule (-plăs'tūl), n. [A dim. fr endoplast.] Zoöl. The micronucleus of Infusoria. — en'do-plas'tu-lar (-tū-lăr), a.
en'do-pleu'rite (-plōō'rīt), n. [endo- + Gr. πλευρα rib.] Zoöl. In crustaceans, the portion of an apodeme developed from the interepimeral membrane — en'do-pleu'ral (-răl), en'do-pleu'rit'ic (-plōō-rĭt'ĭk), a.
en'do-pod, n. = ENDOPODITE.
En'-dor or En'dor (ĕn'dôr). Bib.
en-dore', v. t. [OF. endorer to gild.] Cookery. To make golden in color, as with egg yolk. Obs.
en-dors'a-ble, en'dor-sa'tion, en-dor-see', en-dorse'ment, en-dors'er, etc. Vars. of INDORSABLE, etc.
en'do-sar'code, n. = ENDOSARC. en'do-si'phon, n. [endo- + siphon.] = ENDOSIPHUNCLE. — en'do-si'phon-al (-sĭ'fŏn-ăl), a. — en'do-si'phon-ate, a.
en'do-si'phun-cle, n. [endo- + siphuncle.] Paleon. An inner tube in the calcareous siphuncle of certain fossil cephalopods.
en-dos'mic (ĕn-dŏz'mĭk), a. Endosmotic.
en'dos-mom'e-ter (ĕn'dŏz-mŏm'ē-tẽr; ĕn'dŏs-), n. [endosmose + -meter.] Physics. An instrument for measuring endosmose. — en'dos-mo-met'ric (-mō-mĕt'rĭk), a.
en'dos-mo'sis (-mō'sĭs), n. Also en'dos-mose' (ĕn'dŏz-mōs'; ĕn'dŏs-). [NL. endosmosis. See ENDO- ; OSMOSIS.] See OSMOSIS. — en'dos-mot'ic (-mŏt'ĭk), a. — en'dos-mot'i-cal-ly (-mŏt'ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. — endosmotic equivalent. = OSMOTIC EQUIVALENT.
en-doss', v. t. [F. endosser. See ENDORSE.] To put upon the back or surface of; — the older spelling of endorse. Obs en'do-ster'nite (ĕn'dō-stûr'nīt), n. [endo- + sternum.] Zoöl. a In certain Crustacea, the part of an apodeme derived from the intersternal membrane. b In Arachnida and the king crab, an entosternite.
en'do-ster'num, n.; pl. -STERNA (-nȧ). [NL.] = ENTOSTERNUM.
en-dos'tra-cum (ĕn-dŏs'trā-kŭm), n. [NL.; endo- + Gr. ὄστρακον shell of a testacean.] Zoöl. Inner layer of a crustacean's shell. — en-dos'tra-cal, a.

en'do-style (ĕn'dō-stīl), n. [endo- + Gr. στῦλος a pillar.] Zool. An organ of tunicates, situated along the median ventral line of the branchial sac. It consists of a pair of parallel longitudinal folds projecting into the pharyngeal cavity, and bounding a furrow lined with glandular ciliated cells. A similar endostyle is found in the pharynx of the lancelets. The endostyle is believed by many to be the homologue of the thyroid gland of craniate vertebrates. — en/do-sty'lar (-stī'lər), a. — en/do-sty'lic (-lĭk), a.

en/do-the/ci-al (-thē/shĭ-ăl), a. Bot. a Pertaining to an endothecium. b Having asci inclosed in an ascocarp; as, an endothecial fungus.

en/do-the/ci-um (-shĭ-ŭm; -sĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -CIA (-ȧ). [NL. See ENDO-; THECA.] Bot. a The inner lining of an anther cell. b In mosses, the central mass of cells within the young sporogonium, giving rise to the archespore.

en/do-the/li-o'ma (-thē/lĭ-ō'mȧ), n.; L. pl. -OMATA (-ō'mȧ-tȧ). [NL.; endothelium + -oma.] Med. A tumor developing from endothelium or resembling it in structure.

en/do-the/li-um (-thē/lĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. ENDOTHELIA (-ȧ). [NL.; endo- + Gr. θηλή nipple.] Anat. An epithelium of mesoblastic origin composed of a single layer of thin flattened cells, which lines cavities not directly communicating with the outside of the body, as the serous cavities, the interior of the heart, the blood vessels, lymphatics, etc. — en/do-the/li-al (-ăl), a. — en/do-the/li-oid (-oid), a. — en-doth'e-loid (ĕn-dŏth'ē-loid), a.

en/do-ther'mic (ĕn/dō-thûr'mĭk), a. [endo- + thermic.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a reaction which occurs with absorption of heat; formed by such a reaction, as, an endothermic substance; — opposed to exothermic.

en/do-troph'ic (-trŏf'ĭk), a. [endo- + trophic.] Bot. Nourished from within; — used solely or chiefly in endotrophic mycorrhiza, one growing in the cortical cells of the roots which it inhabits; — opposed to ectotrophic mycorrhiza.

en-dow' (ĕn-dou'), v. t.; EN-DOWED' (-doud'); EN-DOW'ING. [OF. endouer; en- (L. in) + F. douer to endow, L. dotare. See DOWER; cf. ENDUE.] 1. To furnish with money or its equivalent, as a permanent fund for support, to make pecuniary provision for; to settle an income upon; as, to endow a public institution.

2. To furnish with a dower or dowry; as, to endow a widow. Obs. or Archaic.

3. To enrich or furnish with anything of the nature of a gift, as a quality or faculty; — followed by with, rarely by of; as, man is endowed by his Maker with reason.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed Shak.

Syn. — Enrich, furnish, invest, clothe. — ENDOW, ENDUE are often interchangeable. But ENDOW emphasizes the idea of that which is bestowed upon one (often permanently) as a gift; ENDUE, the implication of something with which one is invested as a quality; as, "those who are the most richly endowed by nature, and accomplished by their own industry" (Spectator); "For learning endueth men's minds with a true sense of the frailty of their persons, the casualty of their fortunes, and the dignity of their soul and vocation" (Bacon). See GIFT.

en-dow'ment (-mĕnt), n. 1. Act of endowing, or bestowing a dower, fund, or permanent provision for support.

2. That which is bestowed or settled on a person or an institution; property, fund, or revenue permanently appropriated to any object; as, the endowment of a college.

3. That which is given or bestowed upon the person or mind; gift of nature; natural capacity or power; talents; — usually in pl.

His early endowments had fitted him for the work. I. Taylor.

4. Insurance. See ENDOWMENT INSURANCE.

Syn. — See GIFT.

endowment insurance. Insurance in which the policy (called an endowment policy) provides for the payment of an endowment, or fixed sum to be paid at the expiration of a fixed term of years or (as is also usually stipulated) at prior death. When payable only to those that survive the fixed term it is called pure endowment insurance.

end paper. Bookbinding. A blank leaf placed at either end of the text of a book; a flyleaf.

end plate. A flat plate or platelike terminal thing, as either of the flat plates at the ends of a steam boiler; specif., Anat., one of the flat expansions in which motor nerve fibers terminate in muscular fibers.

end play. Mach. Movement endwise, as of a shaft or axle, or room for such movement.

end product. Chem. The last product of a series of chemical changes involved in the breaking down of a complex substance, or in the action upon it of any reagent.

end rime. Rime at the ends of verses.

Full rime, or end rime, involves the principally stressed vowel in the riming word, and all that follows that vowel. When there is an entire unstressed syllable following, the rime is called double, or feminine. Alden.

end stone. Horol. One of the two plates of a jewel in a timepiece; the part that limits the pivot's end play.

en-due' (ĕn-dū'), v. t.; EN-DUED' (-dūd'); EN-DU'ING. [L. induere, prob. confused with E. endow. See INDUE.] 1. To put on; to invest; to clothe; to endow; to indue (which see).

Endue them . . . with heavenly gifts Bk. of Common Prayer.

2. To lead on; to instruct; to teach; to bring or draw. Obs.

Syn. — See ENDOW.

en-due', v. t.; EN-DUED' (-dūd'); EN-DU'ING. Also endew, indue. [F. enduire, L. inducere to lead into. See INDUCE.] To digest; — now used chiefly of hawks.

en-due', v. i. To digest; to be digested. Obs.

en-dur'a-ble (ĕn-dūr'ȧ-b'l), a. Capable of being endured; sufferable. — en-dur'a-ble-ness, n. — en-dur'a-bly, adv.

en-dur'ance (ĕn-dūr'ăns), n. [Cf. OF. endurance. See ENDURE.] 1. State or quality of enduring, or lasting; continuance.

Slurring with an evasive answer the question concerning the endurance of his own possession Scott.

2. Act of bearing or suffering; a continuing or the power of continuing under pain, hardship, or distress without being overcome; sufferance; patience; as, the endurance of seasoned troops; this is beyond endurance.

Their fortitude was most admirable in their patience and endurance of all evils, of pain and of death Sir W. Temple.

3. A thing endured; a hardship. Now Rare.

Syn. — Suffering, patience, fortitude, resignation.

en-dure' (ĕn-dūr'), v. t.; EN-DURED' (-dūrd'); EN-DUR'ING (-dūr'ĭng). [F. endurer, fr. L. indurare to harden; in- + durare to harden, endure, hold out. See DURE, v. i.; cf. INDURATE.] 1. To continue in the same state without perishing; to last; remain; continue.

The Lord shall endure forever. Ps IX. 7.

2. To remain firm, as under trial or suffering; to suffer patiently or without yielding; to bear up under adversity.

Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong in the days that I shall deal with thee? Ezek. XXII. 14.

3. To harden. Obs.

en-dure', v. t. 1. To remain firm under; to sustain; to undergo; to support without breaking or yielding.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2 To bear with patience; to suffer without sinking under the pressure of affliction; to bear up under; to put up with; to tolerate. "I will no longer endure it." Shak.

3. To be compatible with; to allow; as, the phrase will not endure such an interpretation.

4. To harden; toughen; make hardy, strengthen. Obs.

Manly limbs endured with little ease. Spenser.

Syn. — Last, remain, continue, abide; stand, brook, submit to, tolerate, suffer. See BEAR.

en-dur'ing, p. a. Lasting; durable; long-suffering; as, an enduring disposition. "An enduring substance." Heb. x. 34. — en-dur'ing-ly, adv. — en-dur'ing-ness, n.

end values. Math. In a definite integral, the extreme values of the variable of integration.

end'ways' (ĕnd'wāz'), end'wise' (-wīz'), adv. 1. On end; erectly; in an upright position.

2. With the end forward.

3. Lengthwise; in the direction of the ends.

En-dym'i-on (ĕn-dĭm'ĭ-ŏn), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ἐνδυμίων.] Gr. Myth. A beautiful youth beloved by the moon goddess, Selene, by whom, according to the usual story, he was thrown into a sleep that he might be unconscious of her caresses. One story makes him a shepherd or hunter on Mount Latmus in Caria, who was given eternal youth and eternal life in the form of unbroken slumber by Zeus, and to whom Selene descended nightly. The story is the subject of a poem by Keats.

-ene (-ēn). [Of uncertain origin: cf. L. adjective suffix -enus, Gr. -ηνος.] Chem. A suffix forming the names of certain hydrocarbons; as, ethylene, benzene, etc. In the official nomenclature it is substituted for -ane to indicate the presence of one double bond; as, propene, hexene.

en'e-ma (ĕn'ē-mȧ, ē-nē'mȧ; 277; see note below), n.; pl. E. -MAS (-mȧz), L. ENEMATA (ē-nĕm'ȧ-tȧ). [L. enema, Gr. ἔνεμα, fr. ἐνιέναι to send in; ἐν in + ἰέναι to send.] Med. A liquid preparation injected into the rectum as a medicine or to impart nourishment; a clyster.

☞ The second pronunciation is very common, but, being contrary to the Latin and Greek accentuation, it has been usually considered erroneous by orthoëpists. Cf. ECZEMA.

en'e-my (ĕn'ē-mĭ), n.; pl. -MIES (-mĭz). [OF. enemi, F. ennemi, fr. L. inimicus; in- (negative) + amicus friend. See AMICABLE.] 1. One hostile to another; one who seeks the overthrow or failure of that to which he is opposed; as, the enemies of a legislative measure; enemies of the administration; in a stronger sense, one who hates, and desires or attempts the injury of, another; a foe; an adversary; as, the Devil is the great enemy of mankind; hence, whatever does injury to one; as, an easy disposition may be an enemy to success.

To all good he enemy was still. Spenser.
I say unto you, Love your enemies. Matt. v. 44.

2. A member of a hostile army or a person of a hostile nation; a military foe.

Syn. — Adversary, antagonist, opponent. — ENEMY, FOE, agreeing in the idea of hostility (frequently, but not necessarily, personal), are now practically synonymous, foe being chiefly poetical or rhetorical; as, a man who made few enemies; "He makes no friend who never made a foe" (Tennyson); "We have met the enemy, and they are ours" (Com. Perry); "Whispering with white lips — 'The foe! They come!'" (Byron). See OPPONENT, HOSTILITY.

the enemy. a Mil. The hostile force; — construed either in the singular or the plural; as, the enemy is or are in large force; also, a hostile ship; as, we have sunk the enemy. b The Devil; also, sometimes, death or time personified.

en'e-my, a. 1. Hostile; inimical. Obs.

They . . . every day grow more enemy to God. Jer. Taylor.

2. Of or pertaining to a hostile force or nation. Obsoles.

en-ep'i-der'mic (ĕn-ĕp'ĭ-dûr'mĭk), a. [en- (Gr. ἐν) + epidermic.] Med. Applied to the skin for medicinal purposes.

en/er-ge'ia (ĕn'ẽr-jē'yȧ; -gī'ȧ), or, Greek form, ἐνέργεια, n. [Gr.] Aristotelianism. The state of that which is in the fullness of its proper being and reality; attainment or actuality; existence realized; — opposed to δύναμις, or potentiality; thus, in the dative case (ἐνεργείᾳ) it means in active realization; ἐν δυνάμει means potential but not realized. Cf. endurance. See en'er-ge'sis (ĕn'ẽr-jē'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐνεργεῖν to be in activity. Cf. ENERGY.] Plant Physiol. The chemical process or series of processes within the plant cell by which energy is released through katabolic changes. Energesis may be wholly anaërobic, as in many bacteria, or aërobic, as in all plants growing in the air. In the former case the katabolic processes tend to be arrested when they have reached a certain equilibrium; while the presence of a sufficiency of oxygen admits of continued metabolic activity. Many processes of fermentation are physiologically similar to those of anaërobic energesis, and they have therefore been sometimes distinguished under the name fermentative energesis.

en'er-get'ic (-jĕt'ĭk) } a. [Gr. ἐνεργητικός, fr. ἐνεργεῖν en'er-get'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } to work, be active, fr. ἐνεργός active. See ENERGY.] 1. Having energy or energies; possessing a capacity for action or exerting force; active. "A Being eternally energetic." Grew.

Nor could they [phenomena of conscience] ever enter largely, as energetic facts, into the structure of character, in such a world as we have supposed, part angels and part men. J. Martineau.

2. Exhibiting energy; operating with force, vigor, and effect; forcible; powerful; efficacious; as, energetic measures; energetic laws.

3. Dealing with, or pertaining to, energy.

en'er-get'ics (ĕn'ẽr-jĕt'ĭks), n. 1. Theory or science of the conditions and laws governing manifestation of energy.

2. The physical theory which denies the existence of matter conceived as a passive or inert substance, and which views the physical world as composed of arrangements of energies in space.

en-er'gic (ĕn-ûr'jĭk), a. [Cf. F. énergique.] 1. In a state of action; acting; operating.

2. Having energy or great power, energetic. Rare.

The energic faculty that we call will. Blackw. Mag en-er'gid (-jĭd), n [See ENERGY.] Bot. The structural unit of a cell, consisting of the nucleus with the surrounding cytoplasm which it dominates. Sachs.

en'er-gism (ĕn'ẽr-jĭz'm), n. Ethics. The doctrine that the supreme good consists in the efficient exercise of normal human activities, rather than in happiness.

en'er-gize (-jīz), v. t.; EN'ER-GIZED (-jīzd); EN'ER-GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). [From ENERGY.] 1. To put forth energy; to act.

Of all men it is true that they feel and energize first, they reflect and judge afterwards. J. C. Sharp.

2. To impart energy.

Those nobler exercises of energizing love. Bp. Horsley.

en'er-gize, v. i. To impart energy to; to make active; as, to energize the will; also, to make energetic or vigorous in action; as, to energize the administration of an office.

en'er-gu'men (ĕn'ẽr-gū'mĕn), n. [L. energumenos, fr. Gr. ἐνεργούμενος possessed by an evil spirit, from ἐνεργεῖν: cf. F. énergumène. See ENERGETIC.] 1. Eccl. Antiq. One possessed by an evil spirit; a demoniac.

2. A fanatic or enthusiast.

en'er-gy (ĕn'ẽr-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [L. energia, fr. Gr. ἐνέργεια, fr. ἐνεργός active; ἐν in + ἔργον work: cf. F. énergie. See IN, WORK.] 1. Strength of expression; force of utterance; power to impress the mind and arouse the feelings; life; spirit; — said of speech, language, words, style, etc.

2. Chiefly Philos. Activity; often, contextually, psychical activity; also, specif., the product of activity; an effect.

3. Internal or inherent power; capacity of acting, operating, or producing an effect, whether exerted or not; as, men possessing energies may suffer them to lie inactive.

The great energies of nature. Paley

4. Power efficiently and forcibly exerted; vigorous or effectual operation; as, the energy of a magistrate.

5. Physics. Capacity for performing work; that which in all natural phenomena is continually passing from one portion of matter to another (J. Clerk Maxwell); — orig. defined by Young as the product of the mass of a body into the square of its velocity. Energy is manifested in various forms, as mechanical, electric, thermal, chemical, etc., energies, and changes, under suitable conditions, from any one form into any other. Thus mechanical energy is transformed by means of a dynamo into electric energy and heat energy (the latter due to mechanical friction, electric resistances, etc.). There are two principal kinds of energy: (1) actual, kinetic, or motive energy, which is energy due to motion, as of a moving body or particle, and is numerically expressed as half the product of its mass into the square of its velocity (K. E. $= \frac{1}{2} mv^2$) (2) potential energy, which is the energy due to position, as of a weight raised to a height, to configuration, as of a coiled spring, or the like. The available energy of a material system unconnected with any other system is that energy which is due to the motions of the parts of the system relative to its center of mass. When energy is used without qualification, mechanical energy is usually intended.

6. Metaph. As an equivalent for Aristotle's ἐνεργείᾳ (in dative case), the realized state of potentialities as opposed to their unrealized state, called ἐν δυνάμει by him. True realization is according to him entelechy (which see) or the real existence of form-giving cause as in life and mind. See ACTUS and ACTUS PURUS. W. T. Harris.

Syn. — Strength, vigor, force, potency. See POWER.

energy of rotation. Physics, the product of the moment of inertia of a rotating body by one half the square of its angular velocity. It is the equivalent of the work required to impart to the body its motion of rotation, or of the work which the body will do in coming to rest.

en'gin. Engine. Ref. Sp.

engin. Abbr. Engineering.

3. Any instrument by which any effect is produced; esp., an instrument or machine of war or torture. "Terrible engines of death." Ralegh.

4. Mach. Any of numerous machines by which physical power is applied to produce a desired physical effect, esp. one for converting a physical force, as heat, into mechanical power. The word engine was formerly applied to almost every kind of mechanical appliance, and this usage survives in a few cases, as in beer engine, fire engine (originally a form of pump), rose engine, ruling engine, water engine, etc. Modern usage, however, has generally limited the word to the steam engine and to some analogous machines, as air, gas, hydraulic, and oil engines. In this restricted sense engines may be broadly classified under the following heads, more detailed treatment being given under the separate entries: a According to the working substance whose pressure causes the movement of the piston, vanes, etc., as ammonia, ether, gas, hot-air, steam, etc. b According to the movement of the principal working parts, as reciprocating, rotary, turbine, etc. c According to the place of the source of heat, whether inside or outside the cylinder, as internal-combustion, external-combustion. d According to the manner of applying or using the working substance, as single- or double-acting, condensing or noncondensing (where easily condensible vapors or gases, as steam, are used, excepting in internal-combustion engines), compound, triple-expansion, quadruple-expansion, or multiple-expansion, etc. e According to the kind of valves used, as central-valve, Corliss, etc. f According to the general arrangement, characteristic feature, or direction of the line of stroke, as vertical, horizontal, diagonal or inclined, direct-acting, oscillating or oscillating-cylinder, beam, sidelever, trunk, stationary, portable, etc. g According to the use or application of the whole machine, as blowing, locomotive, marine, pumping, winding, etc. See STEAM ENGINE.

5. Specif., a locomotive engine as used on railroads, including the frame, wheels, bogies, etc.

6. Telephony. A magneto-generator.

2. To use contrivance and effort for; to guide the course of; to manage; as, to engineer a bill through Congress.

en'gi-neer', v. i. To perform the work of an engineer.

Engineer Corps. a In the United States army = CORPS OF ENGINEERS. b In the United States navy, a corps made up of the engineers, which was amalgamated with the line by act of March 3, 1899. It consisted of assistant and passed assistant engineers, ranking with ensigns and lieutenants, chief engineers, ranking from lieutenant to captain, and engineer in chief, ranking with commodore and having charge of the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

en'gi-neer'ing, n. 1. Originally, the art of managing engines; in its modern and extended sense, the art and science by which the mechanical properties of matter are made useful to man in structures and machines; the occupation and work of an engineer. Engineering originally consisted of military engineering, or the art of making and using military engines (now Obs.), the construction of offensive and defensive military works, etc., and, later, also of civil engineering, or the design, construction, and maintenance of public works, as roads, bridges, tunnels, canals, lighthouses, etc. With the enlargement of the field of constructional work, civil engineering came to include mechanical and other branches of engineering, causing a subdivision into numerous branches, as well as the creation of other departments of engineering, so allied or overlapping in some cases as to make impossible a rigid line of demarcation. Chief among these are: mechanical engineering, applying to the construction and use of machinery; mining engineering, dealing with the excavation and working of mines; electrical engineering, treating of the theory and practice of electrical generation and transmission, and the utilization of electrical energy; chemical engineering, concerned chiefly with the preparation of the materials used in industrial chemistry, the design and erection of the necessary plant, etc.; municipal engineering, including the construction and maintenance of waterworks, sewers, refuse destructors, and other municipal works; structural engineering, including the design and erection of modern large structures. Among other special branches are aërial, agricultural, army, gas, hydraulic, irrigation, marine, naval, ordnance, railroad, sanitary, and steam engineering.

Eng'lish (ĭŋ'glĭsh), n. 1. Collectively, the people of England; English people or persons. See ANGLO-SAXON, CELT.

2. The language of the English, and of the people of the United States and most of the British colonies. See INDO-EUROPEAN. The English language has been variously divided into periods by different writers. In the division now most commonly recognized, and adopted in this book, the first period dates from about 450 to 1150. This is the period of full inflection, and is called Anglo-Saxon, or, by many recent writers, Old English. The second period dates from about 1150 to 1550, and is usually called Middle English, or by some Old English. During this period most of the inflections were dropped, there was a great addition of French words to the language, and orthography became comparatively fixed. The last period, from about 1550, is called Modern English. Some make four main divisions: Anglo-Saxon, as above; Old English, from about 1150 to 1350; Middle English, from about 1350 to 1550; and Modern English as above. Each main division in either scheme is also variously subdivided (cf. A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, in this book). The terms Old English, Early English, are indefinitely applied in popular use, the first to any obsolete form of the language, the latter either to early Middle English or to the earlier portion of the Modern English period.

en-grav'ing (ĕn-grāv'ĭng), n. 1. The act or art of producing upon hard material incised or (by extension) raised patterns, characters, lines, and the like, esp. in the surface of metal plates or blocks of wood. Engraving is used for the decoration of the surface itself, as in silver and gold plate, and in niello work; also, for producing an original from which a pattern or design may be printed on paper. The practice of metal engraving in Europe dates from the early Renaissance, but wood engraving is earlier, and it reached great elaboration in the 15th century, when it was comparatively independent of the designs of other artists than the engravers, as in the works of Wohlgemuth, Schongauer, Dürer, etc. In lithography some processes involve more or less engraving of the stone. For various processes, see under ANAGLYPTOGRAPHIC, ANASTATIC, AQUATINT, CHALCOGRAPHY, CRIBLÉ, DRY POINT, ETCHING, HELIOGRAVURE, HELIOTYPY, LINE, LITHOGRAPHY, MEZZOTINT, PHOTO-ENGRAVING, PHOTO-INTAGLIO, STIPPLE, XYLOGRAPHY.

2. That which is engraved; an engraved plate or block.

3. An impression from an engraving, as an engraved plate, block of wood, or other material; a print. Engravings or prints taken from wood blocks are usually specifically called woodcuts; those from metal plates are specifically called etchings, mezzotints, etc., according to their nature.

Engraving, cut, or print. These terms are defined in the law to be applied only to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts, that is to say, to articles sold or exchanged for their artistic value. U. S. Information Circular on Copyrights

INSIGNIA, 3d ANCIENT.] 1. A flag; a banner, a standard; esp., the national flag, or a banner indicating nationality. The ensign of the United States is the Stars and Stripes. A foul anchor surrounded by thirteen white stars upon a blue field as the union distinguishes the yacht ensign. The ensign of the United States Revenue Marine has sixteen vertical stripes, alternately red and white, and the union is the eagle of the national coat of arms in blue under a semicircle of thirteen blue stars on a white field. (See Plates.) The ensign borne by British ships has the union in the canton upon a field of white (with the red cross of St. George upon the field), blue, or red, these colors now distinguishing respectively men-of-war and the yachts of the Royal Yacht Squadron; the Royal Naval Reserve and most yachts; and merchantmen. Prior to 1864 British naval vessels bore ensigns with red, white, or blue fields as they belonged to the red, white, or blue squadrons. (See Plates.)

V., ch. xix., an imaginary kingdom governed by Queen Quinte Essence and visited by Pantagruel and his companions in their search to find the oracle of the Holy Bottle. This country symbolizes the taste for speculative science, and probably suggested the island of Laputa in Swift's "Gulliver's Travels."
en-tel'e-chy (ĕn-tĕl'ē-kĭ), n.; pl. -CHIES (-kĭz). [L. entelechia, Gr. ἐντελέχεια, prob. fr. ἐν τέλει ἔχειν to be complete; ἐν + τέλος completion, end + ἔχειν to have or hold.] Metaph. A word adopted from Aristotle (ἐντελέχεια), who uses it in two senses: a As realization of forming cause or energy (which see), as contrasted with mere potential existence. Under potentiality, see illustration of water as potentially liquid, solid, or vapor, but real in only one of these at a time. b In life and mental phenomena entelechy is the realization of form-giving cause in a more or less perfect actuality as plants, animals, and men, as individuals and existing species. In this second meaning entelechy is used to express not a mere actuality, but an actuality that has the power to produce other actualities of the same kind or species, e. g., plants and animals reproduce their species. The attempt to seize and restate this thought of Aristotle has given to the history of philosophy its most valuable systems, not only such as those of Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas, Leibnitz and Hegel, but also especially those of Plotinus, and Proclus among the Neoplatonists. W. T. Harris.
en-tel'lus (ĕn-tĕl'ŭs), n. [NL., the specific name, perh. fr. L. Entellus, the name of a Sicilian hero.] An East Indian long-tailed bearded monkey (Presbytis entellus) regarded as sacred by the natives. It is remarkable for the caplike arrangement of the hair on the head.

F. enthousiasme. See ENTHEOS, THEISM.] 1. Inspiration as if by a divine or superhuman power; ecstasy; divine possession or frenzy; — now chiefly with classical allusion.

Enthusiasm is founded neither on reason nor divine revelation, but rises from the conceits of a warmed or overweening imagination. Locke.

2. A state of impassioned emotion; transport; elevation of fancy; exaltation of soul.

Resolutions adopted in enthusiasm are often repented of when excitement has been succeeded by the wearing duties of hard everyday routine. Froude.

3. Strong excitement of feeling on behalf of a cause or a subject; ardent and imaginative zeal or interest, fervor; as, he engaged in his profession with enthusiasm.

Nothing great was ever achieved without enthusiasm Emerson

4. Lively manifestation of joy or zeal.

5. That which is pursued or regarded with enthusiasm; as, Emerson is her one enthusiasm. Colloq.

Syn. — See EAGERNESS.

en-thu'si-ast (-ăst), n. [Gr. ἐνθουσιαστής: cf. F. enthousiaste.] 1. One moved or actuated by enthusiasm; as: a One who is inspired, or possessed. b A religious madman; a fanatic. c One whose mind is wholly possessed and heated by what engages it; one who is influenced by a peculiar fervor of mind; an ardent and imaginative person.

2. [cap.] pl. Eccl. Hist. The Euchites; — so called because they believed men able through asceticism to enter into direct communion with the Holy Spirit Dict. of Phil.

Syn. — ENTHUSIAST, FANATIC, ZEALOT, BIGOT. An ENTHUSIAST, as here compared, is a person of keen and ardent interests, the term sometimes implies a subordination of judgment to enthusiasm; as, "The man is all fire, and an enthusiast in the highest degree on the subject of Homer" (Cowper); the dreams of an enthusiast. A FANATIC is an extreme or unreasonable enthusiast, esp. in matters of religious belief or opinion; as, "—— is made up of ice and flame. He has . . . no mean temperature. Hence he is rarely interested about any public measure but he becomes a fanatic, and oversteps, in his irrespective zeal, every decency and every right opposed to his course" (Coleridge). A ZEALOT is a fanatical devotee or partisan; as, "A furious zealot may think he does God service by persecuting one of a different sect" (Gilpin). A BIGOT is one who is obstinately, often blindly, devoted to his own (esp. religious) beliefs or opinions; as compared with fanatic and zealot, the term implies dogged intolerance rather than misguided enthusiasm or zeal; as, "the hell that bigots frame to punish those who err" (Shelley); cf. "bigoted and intolerant in his judgment of men and things" (Hazlitt). See VISIONARY, EAGERNESS, FERVENT.

en-thu'si-as'tic (ĕn-thū'zĭ-ăs'tĭk) } a. [Gr. ἐνθουσιαστι-

PRISE.] An employer in his character of one who assumes the risk and management of business; an undertaker (in the technical economic sense). Cf. PROFIT, EARNINGS OF MANAGEMENT.

The whole annual gains of society . . distribute themselves into . . the earnings of labor, the earnings of capital, and the gains from a certain coordinating process that is performed by the employers of labor and users of capital. This purely coordinating work we shall call the entrepreneur's function, and the rewards for it we shall call profits. The function in itself includes no working, and no owning of capital: it consists entirely in the establishing and maintaining of efficient relations between the agents of production. J. B. Clark.

en'zo-ŏt'ic (ĕn'zō-ŏt'ĭk), a. [Gr. ἐν in + ζῷον an animal: cf. F. enzootique.] Afflicting animals; — corresponding to endemic as applied to diseases of man.

en-zo'ŏ-ty (ĕn-zō'ŏ-tĭ), n. [Cf. F. enzootie.] Veter. An enzootic disease.

en'zyme (ĕn'zīm), n. [LGr. ἔνζυμος leavened; Gr. ἐν in + ζύμη leaven.] 1. Chem. Any of a number of complex organic substances capable of effecting by catalytic action the transformation — in most cases hydrolytic — of some other compound or compounds; a soluble ferment. See FERMENT. The enzymes have also been called unorganized, unformed, or chemical ferments, in distinction from organized or living ferments, as yeast. It is now known, however, that the yeast plant secretes an enzyme, zymase, which decomposes the sugar in alcoholic fermentation, and it is probable that the other so-called living ferments act by the same means. Enzymes have an optimum temperature of action which usually lies between 30° and 50° C.; when heated to 100° in the presence of water they lose their activity. They are soluble in water, but are precipitated by alcohol, and are carried down when other compounds are precipitated. Such precipitates are never pure, and exact knowledge as to the composition and physical properties of enzymes is lacking. It has even been claimed that what are called enzymes are in reality only properties of other substances, but this is not generally accepted. A structural correspondence is thought to exist between enzymes and the bodies which they decompose. Enzymes are divided into several classes: those decomposing carbohydrates, as diastase; decomposing proteids (proteolytic), as pepsin; decomposing glucosides, as emulsin; decomposing fats (lipolytic), as lipase; producing oxidation, as laccase; producing coagulation, as rennin, etc. — en-zym'ic (ĕn-zĭm'ĭk), a.

2. Eccl. Leavened bread, specif. that used in the Eucharist by the Eastern Church; — opposed to azym.

e'o- (ē'ō-). A combining form from Greek ἠώς dawn, daybreak, used, as in paleontology and geology, to indicate connection with, or relation to, an early period of time, and specif. the first of two or three subdivisions of a division of geologic time; as, *Eo*paleozoic, *Eo*devonian; — distinguished from meso- and neo-.

e-o'an (ē-ō'ăn), a. [L. eous, Gr., ἠῳος fr. ἠώς dawn.] Of or pertaining to the dawn or the east. Shelley.

E'o-cene (ē'ō-sēn), a. [eo- + Gr. καινός recent.] Geol. Pertaining to or designating the earliest principal subdivision of the Tertiary period or system; commonly the period preceding the Oligocene, but sometimes all of the Cenozoic era preceding the Miocene. See TERTIARY; GEOLOGY, Chart. — n. The Eocene epoch or series.

E'o-gæ'a (-jē'ă), n. [NL.; Gr. ἠώς dawn (see EO-) + γαῖα, γῆ, land.] Zoögeog. A primary division which includes the African, South American, Australian, and New Zealand regions; — opposed to Cænogæa. — E/o-gæ'an (-ăn), a.

e'o-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. [L. Aeolus god of the winds.] Phys. Geog. The action of wind on land surfaces.

e'o-lith (ē'ō-lĭth), n. Archæol. The rudest type of celt; a stone implement characteristic of eolithic culture.

e'o-lith'ic (ē'ō-lĭth'ĭk), a. [eo- + Gr. λίθος stone.] Archæol. Pertaining to or designating the earliest stage of human culture that is represented by the use of worked stone implements. See PALEOLITHIC.

e'on (ē'ŏn), æ'on (ē'ŏn), n. [See ÆON.] 1. A period of existence; an age, esp., the period of the world's duration; an immeasurable or infinite space of time; eternity; a long space of time. The term is used by some writers on geology to denote any one of the four grand divisions of geological time, as the Paleozoic.

2. Philos. See ÆON, 2

e'o-sin (ē'ō-sĭn), n. Also e'o-sine (-sĭn; -sēn; 184). [Gr. ἠώς dawn.] Chem. a A dyestuff, $C_{20}H_8O_5Br_4$, obtained by the action of bromine on fluorescein, and named from the fine rose-red which it imparts to silk. It is sold in the sodium or potassium salt, often as a brownish red powder. It is used for dyeing wool, silk, and cotton, for making pink lakes and red ink, in microscopy as a stain, etc. Its solution is fluorescent. b Any of several similar dyes derived from fluorescein — e'o-sin'ic (-sĭn'ĭk), a.

e'o-sin'o-phile (-ō-fīl, -fĭl) } a. [eosin + -phile, -phil] e'o-sin'o-phil (-sĭn'ō-fĭl) } Biol. Staining readily with eosin, specif., Anat., designating a form of leucocyte containing in the cytoplasm numerous coarse granules that stain with eosin. They form only a little more than two per cent of the leucocytes in normal human blood. — n. An eosinophile leucocyte. — e'o-sin'o-phil'ic (-fĭl'ĭk), a.

e'o-si-noph'i-lous (-sĭ-nŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a.

e'o-sin'o-phil'i-a (-fĭl'ĭ-ă), n. [NL.] Med. Abnormal condition of the blood marked by an increase in the proportional number of eosinophiles.

e-os'pho-rite (ē-ŏs'fō-rīt), n. [From Gr. Ἑωσφόρος bringer of morn.] Min. A hydrous phosphate of aluminium and manganese, in prismatic crystals or massive. It is generally of a rose-pink color, whence the name.

e'o-zo'ŏn (ē'ō-zō'ŏn), n.; pl. E. -zoöns (-ŭnz), L. -zoa (-ă). [NL.; eo- + -zoön.] Geol. A peculiar arrangement of the components of certain limestones associated with the Laurentian gneiss of Canada, formerly regarded as the remains of an animal related to, but much larger than, the existing Foraminifera. It was considered the oldest known fossil, and named Eozoon canadense. — e'o-zo'ŏn-al (-ŏn-ăl), a.

ep-ac'me (ĕp-ăk'mē), n. [epi- + acme.] Evolution. The condition of incomplete development in the phylogeny of a group of organisms before reaching the acme.

Ep'a-cri-da'ce-æ (ĕp'ă-krĭ-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See EPACRIS.] Bot. A family of Australasian shrubs, small trees, and woody vines (order Ericales), resembling the heaths, which they practically replace in Australia. There are about 21 genera, many monotypic. Epacris and Styphelia are the most important. — ep'a-cri-da'ceous (shŭs), a.

Ep'a-cris (ĕp'ă-krĭs; ē-păk'rĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἔπακρος pointed at the end; — from the sharply pointed leaves] Bot. A genus of shrubs typifying the family Epacridaceæ. Many species are cultivated for their heathlike, white, red, or purple flowers. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus.

e'pact (ē'păkt; 277), n. [F. épacte, fr. Gr. ἐπακτός brought on or in, added, fr. ἐπάγειν to bring on or in; ἐπι on, in + ἄγειν to bring or lead. See EPI-; ACT.] Chron. That which is added or intercalated; the period which would have to be added to harmonize the lunar with the solar calendar. Specif.: a The number which denotes the excess of the solar year over the lunar year of twelve months — about eleven days; — called also annual epact. b The moon's age at the beginning of the calendar year, or the number of days by which the last new moon has preceded the beginning of the year; — as, a table of epacts. See EASTER. c The excess of a calendar month over a lunar month; — called also menstrual epact, or monthly epact.

ep'a-gom'e-næ (ĕp'ă-gŏm'ē-nē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐπαγόμενος, p. pr. pass. of ἐπάγειν to bring on, add, intercalate.] Additional days, esp. the five or six days added to the twelve months of the year in the old Egyptian calendar. — ep'a-gom'e-nal (-năl), ep'a-go-men'ic (-gŏ-mĕn'ĭk), a.

ep-an'o-dos (ĕp-ăn'ō-dŏs), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἐπάνοδος a rising, return; ἐπί + ἄνοδος a way up, rising; ἀνά up + ὁδός way.] Rhet. A return after digression; also, Obs. or R., a repetition in inverse order, as in the following: —

O more exceeding love, or law more just?
Just law, indeed, but more exceeding love! Milton ep-an'o-dy (-dĭ), n. [See EPANODOS.] Bot. The abnormal change of an irregular flower to a regular form; — considered by evolutionists a reversion to an ancestral condition.

Ep'an-or'thi-dæ (ĕp'ăn-ôr'thĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; epi- + Gr. ἀνορθός upright, erect.] Zool. A family of South American diprotodont marsupials of which the genus Ep'an-or'thus (-thŭs), having a single pair of very large chisel-shaped incisors in the lower jaw, is the type. All of the family are extinct except the genus Cænolestes.

ep'ic (ĕp'ĭk), a. [L. epicus, Gr. ἐπικός, from ἔπος a word, speech, tale, song; akin to L. vox voice: cf. F. épique. See VOICE.] Designating, pertaining to, or characteristic of, a kind of narrative poetry in which is treated a theme of action in heroic proportions and style. In the Greek conception, epic poetry is distinguished from lyric in being intended for recitation rather than singing (although in the earliest period it was probably chanted to accompaniment) and from dramatic in being delivered without imitative action. According to Aristotle, the essentials of an epic poem are a dignified theme, organic unity, and an orderly progress of the action. As a rule epic poems derive their unity from some central hero whose exploits or fortunes are the thread of the discourse, as Achilles in the "Iliad" (cf. ACHILLEID), Odysseus in the "Odyssey," Æneas in the "Æneid," Beówulf in "Beówulf," etc. The Greek epic period is generally estimated as coming to a close about 700–650 B. C. Its termination was marked by the composition of the cyclic poems, epical narratives chiefly completing the myths of Troy and the Greek heroes in part treated in the Homeric poems (see CYCLIC, 2). In epic poetry the epos, as a series of poems dealing with a connected theme but not formally united, is sometimes distinguished from the epopee, the united and unified epic narrative formed from these.

epic cæsura, Pros., a feminine cæsura following a hypermetrical light syllable as in the following:

E'phron (ē'frŏn) Bib

eph'thi-a-nure (ĕf'thĭ-ä-nūr), n. A bird of the genus Ephthianura.

Eph'y-dra (ĕf'ĭ-drä), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἔφυδρος living on the water; ἐπί upon + ὕδωρ water.] Zoöl. The genus containing the typical brine flies. It is made the type of a subfamily, Eph'y-dri'næ (-drĭ'nē), or of a family, Eph-yd'ri-dæ (ĕf-ĭd'rĭ-dē) — eph'y-drid (ĕf'ĭ-drĭd), a. & n.

eph-yd'ri-ad (ĕf-ĭd'rĭ-ăd), n. [Gr. ἐφυδριάς, -άδος, of the water.] A water nymph. Rare.

eph-ym'ni-um (ĕf-ĭm'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr Gr. ἐφύμνιον.] Pros. a In classical hymns, a refrain or short colon following a number of lines or a metrical system. b In the Eastern churches, a line of different formation ending a stanza or the hymn; also, the antiphon when repeated.

e-ph-y-z'u-la (ē-fĭ-zĭ'ū-lä), n. [NL., dim.] Zool. = EPHYRA.

‖ ep-ib'a-tus (ĕp-ĭb'ä-tŭs (ĕp-ĭb'ā-tŭs or ŭ s), a. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐπιβατός.] Class Pros. Marked by a special beating: — of a doubled or decasemic pæonic foot. — n. The doubled pæon.

ep'i-ben'thos (ĕp'ĭ-bĕn'thŏs), n. [epi- + Gr. βένθος depth.] Biol. The fauna and flora inhabiting the portion of the sea bottom between low-water mark and the mesobenthos. Its lower limit is variable, usually a depth of about 100 fathoms. — ep'i-ben'thic (-thĭk), a.

ep'i-blas-te'ma (ĕp'ĭ-blăs-tē'mä), n. [NL.; epi- + blastema.] Bot. = EMERGENCE.

ep-ib'o-le (ĕp-ĭb'ŏ-lē), n. [NL. See EPIBOLY.] 1. Rhet A figure by which the initial word or words of successive clauses are the same or similar in meaning. 2. Biol. = EPIBOLY.

ep-ib'o-lism (-lĭz'm) = EPIBOLY.

ep'i-bou-lan'ger-ite, n. [epi- + boulangerite] Min. A compound of lead, antimony, and sulphur, $Pb_3Sb_2S_6$, in dark or black needles or granular. Sp. gr., 6 31.

ep'i-bran'chi-al, a. [epi- + branchial.] Zool. Pert. to or designating the segment next below the pharyngobranchial in a branchial arch. — n. An epibranchial cartilage or bone.

Ep'i-cau'ta (-kô'tä), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐπίκαυτος burnt at the end.] Zool A genus of blister beetles of the family Meloidæ, containing several species common in the eastern United States.

‖ é'pice' (ā'pēs'), n. [F.] Spice.

ep'i-cede (ĕp'ĭ-sēd), n. An epicedium.

ep'i-ce'di-a, n., pl. of EPICEDIUM.

ep'i-ce'di-an, a. Epicedial. — n. An epicede. Obs.

ep'i-ce-di'on, n. = EPICEDIUM.

ep'i-cele. Var. of EPICŒLE.

Gram., having but one form to indicate both masculine and feminine genders; — said of nouns, as Gr. βοῦς, L. bos, a bull, an ox or a cow.

2. Having characteristics of, or adapted to, both sexes; hence, neither one thing nor the other; effeminate.

He represented an epicene species, neither churchman nor layman. J. A. Symonds.

ep'i-cen'ter, -cen'tre (-sĕn'tẽr), n. [epi- + center.] Geol. The portion of the earth's surface directly above the focus of an earthquake; seismic vertical.

ep'i-cen'tral (-sĕn'trăl), a. [epi- + centrum.] Anat. Arising from the centrum of a vertebra. — n. An epicentral bone or spine.

ep'i-cer'e-bral (-sĕr'ē-brăl), a. [epi- + cerebral.] Anat. Situated above the brain.

ep'i-chei-re'ma (-kī-rē'mȧ), n.; pl. -REMATA (-rē'mȧ-tȧ). [L., fr. Gr. ἐπιχείρημα, fr. ἐπιχειρεῖν to attempt to prove.] Logic. A syllogism in which the proof of one or both of the premises is introduced with the premises themselves.

ep'i-chor'dal (-kôr'dăl), a. [epi- + chordal.] Upon or above the notochord; — applied esp. to vertebræ or elements of vertebræ which develop upon the dorsal side of the notochord.

ep'i-cho'ri-al (-kō'rĭ-ăl; 201), a. [Gr. ἐπιχώριος; ἐπί over + χώρα country.] In or of the country, peculiar or proper to a certain region.

ep'i-cho'ric (-kō'rĭk; -kŏr'ĭk), a. Epichorial; local.

ep'i-cœle (ĕp'ĭ-sēl), n. [epi- + Gr. κοίλον a hollow.] 1. Zoöl. A perivisceral cavity formed by the invagination of the outer wall of the body, as the atrial cavity of tunicates.

2. Anat. = EPICŒLIA.

ep'i-cœ'li-a (-sē'lĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; epi- + Gr. κοιλία a cavity of the body.] Anat. The cavity of the epencephalon, or the anterior part of the fourth ventricle of the brain. — ep'i-cœ'li-ac (-ăk), ep'i-cœ'li-an (-ăn), a.

ep'i-con'dyle (-kŏn'dĭl; -dīl), n. [epi- + condyle.] Anat. Orig., the external condyle, or outer protuberance, at the distal end of the humerus; — now often, also, the internal condyle. — ep'i-con'dy-lar (-dĭ-lär), a.

ep'i-cor'mic (-kôr'mĭk), a. [See EPI-; CORMUS.] Forestry. Growing, as a branch, from a dormant bud which has been suddenly exposed to the full influence of light and air.

ep'i-cot'yl (-kŏt'ĭl), n. [epi- + cotyledon.] Bot. The upper portion of the axis of an embryo or seedling, above the cotyledons. Cf. HYPOCOTYL.

ep'i-cot'y-le'don-a-ry (-kŏt'ĭ-lē'dŭn-ȧ-rĭ; -lē'dŏn-ȧ-rĭ), a. Bot. Situated above the cotyledons.

ep'i-cra'ni-um (-krā'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; epi- + cranium.] 1. Zool. The dorsal wall of the head of insects, sometimes including the clypeus.

2. Anat. The structures covering the cranium.

ep-ic'ri-sis (ĕp-ĭk'rĭ-sĭs), n.; pl. -SES (-sēz). [Gr. ἐπίκρισις determination, fr. ἐπικρίνειν to judge; ἐπί upon + κρίνειν to judge.] Critical estimate of a literary work or a passage, with discussion of the subject matter, esp. of the Hebrew Scriptures.

ep'i-cri'sis (ĕp'ĭ-krī'sĭs), n. [NL.; epi- + crisis.] Med. That which follows a crisis; specif., a secondary crisis.

Ep'ic-te'tian (ĕp'ĭk-tē'shăn), a. [Gr. 'Επικτήτειος, fr. 'Επίκτητος Epictetus.] Pertaining to Epictetus, the Roman Stoic philosopher, who taught that the greatest good lies in independence of external things and in reliance upon the inner life or character.

ep'i-cure (ĕp'ĭ-kūr), n. [L Epicurus, Gr. 'Επίκουρος, a famous Greek philosopher, who has been regarded, but erroneously, as teaching a doctrine of refined voluptuousness.]

1. [cap.] A follower of Epicurus; an Epicurean. Obs.

2. One devoted to dainty or luxurious sensual enjoyments, esp. to the luxuries of the table.

Syn. — EPICURE, GOURMET, GOURMAND, GLUTTON. An EPICURE, in modern usage, is one who is choice and dainty, while at the same time voluptuous, in enjoyment (esp.) of food and drink; a GOURMET is a connoisseur in delicate viands. A GOURMAND is less fastidious than a gourmet, less greedy and voracious than a GLUTTON. See SATIATE, GREEDY.

I am become a pertect epicure in reading; plain beef or solid mutton will never do. Goldsmith

The flavor of those ready-made pleasures was sometimes a little bitter: but she was young; and youth is a gourmand when it cannot be a gourmet. McClure's Magazine.

It would be very difficult to determine whether they were most to be distinguished as gluttons or epicures; for they were, at once, dainty and voracious, understood the right and the wrong of every dish, and alike emptied the one and the other.

Mad. D'Arblay.

ep'i-cu-re'an (-kū-rē'ăn), a. [L. Epicureus, Gr. 'Επικούρειος: cf. F. épicurien.] 1. [cap.] Pertaining to Epicurus, or to his philosophy. "The sect Epicurean." Milton.

2. Given to luxury or to sensual gratifications; adapted to luxurious tastes; luxurious, pertaining to good eating.

Courses of the most refined and epicurean dishes. Prescott.

ep'i-cu-re'an, n. 1. [cap.] A follower of Epicurus.

2. One given to epicurean indulgence.

Ep'i-cu-re'an-ism (ĕp'ĭ-kū-rē'ăn-ĭz'm), n. Attachment to the doctrines of Epicurus; the principles or belief of Epicurus. Epicureanism is mainly identified with the ethical doctrines of Epicurus, who taught that pleasure is the only good and the end of all morality. The life of pleasure, however, to be genuine must be a life of prudence, honor, and justice, and a man's happiness is properly attained by taking away from his desires. In physics, Epicurus was an atomist of the school of Democritus. Cf. HEDONISM.

ep'i-cur-ism (ĕp'ĭ-kūr-ĭz'm; in sense 1 ĕp'ĭ-kū'rĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. épicurisme.] 1. [cap.] The doctrines or principles of Epicurus, Epicureanism.

2. [See EPICURE.] Epicurean habits or tastes; luxury.

ep'i-cy'cle (ĕp'ĭ-sī'k'l), n. [L. epicyclus, Gr. ἐπικυκλος; ἐπί upon + κύκλος circle. See CYCLE.] 1. Ptolemaic Astron. A circle whose center moves round in the circumference of a greater circle; or a small circle whose center, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with the deferent, and yet, by its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet upon it round its proper center.

2. Geom. The circle generating an epicycloid or hypocycloid.

ep'i-cyc'lic (-sĭk'lĭk; -sī'klĭk; 277) } ep'i-cyc'li-cal (-sĭk'lĭ-kăl; -sī'klĭ-kăl) } a. Pertaining to, resembling, or having the motion of, an epicycle.

epicyclic train, Mach., a train of spur or bevel wheels, belt pulleys, or the like, having one or more of the wheels, etc., constrained to move bodily around the circumference of another wheel, pulley, or the like, which may be fixed or moving. This device is employed to obtain an unusual velocity ratio without undue complexity of parts, for certain change-speed gears (see CRYPTO GEAR), and in differential motions.

E Epicycloid traced by point P in circle rolling on the Fixed Circle F; H Hypocycloid traced by P' in circle rolling within F.

ep'i-cy-cloid (ĕp'ĭ-sī'kloid), n. [epicycle + -oid: cf. F. épicycloïde.] Geom. A curve traced by a point of a circle that rolls on the outside of a fixed circle. When the circle rolls inside the fixed circle the curve described is called a hypocycloid. The curve traced by a point on the radius (or radius prolonged) of a rolling circle, but not on the rolling circle, is called an epitrochoid or hypotrochoid, according as the circle rolls on the outside or on the inside of the fixed circle. All such curves are called roulettes or trochoids.

ep'i-cy-cloi'dal (-sī-kloi'dăl), a. Pertaining to the epicycloid, or having its properties epicycloidal wheel, Mach., a spur wheel which revolves inside the circumference of an annular wheel of twice its diameter in gear with it. Any point in the pitch circle of the smaller wheel will move in a straight line, hence the device is used as a straight-line motion.

ep'i-cyte (ĕp'ĭ-sīt), n. [epi- + -cyte.] Biol. The investing membrane of a cell.

ep'i-deic'tic (-dīk'tĭk) } ep'i-deic'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } a. [Gr. ἐπιδεικτικός, fr. ἐπιδείκνυναι to show forth, display; ἐπί + δεικνύναι to show. Cf. EPIDICTIC.] Serving for exhibition or display; — esp. designating a kind of oratory.

The epideictic, sometimes called the demonstrative or panegyrical, is concerned with praise or blame. A. S. Cook.

ep'i-dem'ic (-dĕm'ĭk) } ep'i-dem'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } a. [L. epidemus, Gr. ἐπίδημος, fr. ἐπί in + δῆμος people: cf. F. épidémique. Cf. DEMAGOGUE.] 1. Med. Common to, or affecting at the same time, a large number in a community; — applied to a disease which, spreading widely, attacks many persons at the same time; as, an epidemic disease; an epidemic catarrh, fever, etc. See ENDEMIC.

2. Spreading widely, or generally prevailing; affecting great numbers, as an epidemic disease does; as, epidemic rage; an epidemic evil.

It was the epidemical sin of the nation. Bp. Burnet.

ep'i-dem'ic, n. [Cf. EPIDEMY.] 1. Med. An epidemic disease.

2. An attack of anything so general as to be like an epidemic disease; as, an epidemic of terror.

ep'i-de'mi-og'ra-phy (-dē'mĭ-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ; ĕp'ĭ-dĕm'ĭ-), n. [epidemy + -graphy.] Med. A treatise upon, or history of, epidemic diseases. — ep'i-de'mi-og'ra-phist (-rȧ-fĭst), n.

ep'i-de'mi-ol'o-gy (-ŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [epidemy + -logy.] Medical science treating of epidemics. — ep'i-de'mi-o-log'i-cal (-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — ep'i-de'mi-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n.

ep'i-dem-y (ĕp'ĭ-dĕm-ĭ), n. [F. épidémie, LL. epidemia, Gr. ἐπιδημία, fr. ἐπίδημιος. See EPIDEMIC.] Med. An epidemic. Obs.

Ep'i-den'drum (ĕp'ĭ-dĕn'drŭm), n. [NL.; epi- + Gr. δένδρον tree.] Bot. A very large and diversified genus of chiefly epiphytic tropical American orchids, a few of which occur in Florida. They are extensively cultivated for their showy, often variegated, flowers, in which the lip is spreading and usually deeply lobed, its claw being adnate to the column. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. See EPIPHYTE, Illust.

Epidendrum (E. bicornutum). Flowers, Leaves, and upper portion of Pseudo-bulb.

ep'i-der'mal (-dûr'măl) } ep'i-der'mic (-mĭk) } a. [Cf. F. épidermique.] Pert. to, or arising from, the epidermis; epidermic, epidermal.

ep'i-der'min (-mĭn), n. [See EPIDERMIS.] Pharm. A preparation consisting of white wax, powdered acacia, glycerin, and water, used in surgical dressings.

ep'i-der'mis (-mĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἐπιδερμίς; ἐπί over + δέρμα skin, fr. δέρειν to skin. See TEAR, v. t.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. a The outer epithelial layer of the skin or external integument of the body, derived from the epiblast of the embryo. See ECTODERM, SKIN. In vertebrates it consists of numerous layers of cells which become more or less horny toward the exterior, and form the nonsensitive and nonvascular layer of the skin which overlies the dermis. The hairs, feathers, nails, hoofs, and other horny structures of vertebrates are outgrowths of the epidermis. b Hence, by extension, any of various other integuments; esp., the periostracum, or chitinous outer covering, of the shells of many mollusks.

2. Bot. The thin layer of cells forming the external integument in seed plants and pteridophytes. The epidermis is always present on leaves and herbaceous stems or shoots, its growth keeping pace with that of the primary cortex. Its cells usually lack chloroplasts, but are rich in cell sap, which is often pigmented. In woody stems it is soon ruptured by the growth of the wood, its place as protective tissue being taken by the cork layer (see CORK, 1). No true epidermis occurs in the lower plants, although the scaly layer on the thallus of foliose lichens is sometimes so called.

ep'i-der'moid (-moid), ep'i-der-moi'dal (-dĕr-moi'dăl), a. [Cf. F. épidermoïde.] Pert. to or resembling epidermis.

ep'i-di'a-scope (-dī'ȧ-skōp), n. [epi- + dia- + -scope.] A kind of magic lantern for projecting images both of opaque and transparent objects.

ep'i-did'y-mis (-dĭd'ĭ-mĭs), n. [NL., fr. [NL. ; epi- + Gr. θηλή nipple.] 1. Biol. A cellular tissue covering a free surface or lining a tube or cavity, and consisting of one or more layers of cells with scarcely any intercellular substance, so that the cells form a practically unbroken sheet or membrane. As a consequence of their position, it is largely through the epithelial cells that an animal comes into relation with the external world. They serve, as in the epidermis, to inclose and protect the other parts of the body, and they form the most essential part of the sense organs. Through their substance, and largely by their activity, the body absorbs its nutriment and excretes its waste products, and they are the active elements of glands and elaborate the secretions. Excepting most epithelium of the reproductive and urinary organs, which is mesoblastic, the epithelia are chiefly of epiblastic and hypoblastic origin (see GERM LAYER). The lining of the serous cavities, blood and lymph vessels, etc., is, however, mesoblastic, and is distinguished as endothelium. Epithelia are classified as simple and stratified, according as they consist of one or more layers of cells, and further as cylindrical or columnar, cubical, squamous, etc., according to the shape of the individual cells (or of the cells of superficial layers in stratified epithelia). Tessellated or pavement epithelium consists of thin flat cells joined by their edges. In the epithelium of the bladder and ureters (called transitional) three layers may usually be distinguished, the superficial one consisting of flattened or cubical cells. In ciliated epithelia the exposed surface bears cilia (see CILIA).

two axle springs in a locomotive car or truck to distribute the weight evenly to the wheels. c Elec. An equalizer. equalizing file See FILE, tool. — e. gear, Mach., an epicycloidal gear used on steam fire engines and traction engines to enable the driving wheels to rotate at different velocities in turning a corner. — e. pipe, Ordnance, a pipe connecting the recoil cylinders in coast artillery carriages, to equalize the amount of oil, and so the resistance, in each.

e'qual-ly (ē'kwȧl-ĭ), adv. In an equal manner or degree; in equal shares or proportion; with equal and impartial justice; without difference, alike; evenly; justly; as, equally taxed, furnished, etc.

equally pinnate. Bot. = ABRUPTLY PINNATE.

e'qua-nim'i-ty (ē'kwȧ-nĭm'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L aequanimitas, fr. aequanimus: cf. F. équanimité. See EQUANIMOUS.] 1. Impartial judgment; equity. Obs.

2. Evenness of mind, that calm temper or firmness of mind which is not easily elated or depressed; composure; as, to bear misfortunes with equanimity.

Syn. — Evenness, equability, calmness, serenity, tranquillity, self-possession. — EQUANIMITY, COMPOSURE. EQUANIMITY is a settled and equable temper of the mind; COMPOSURE commonly implies the conquest of mental agitation or disturbance; as, "His placidity of demeanor . . . arose from true equanimity; but it was the equanimity of a cold disposition rather than of one well ordered by discipline" (Trollope); "His passion tamed and all at his control, how perfect the composure of his soul!" (Cowper). See BALANCE, COOL, CALM, EQUABLE.

e-quan'i-mous (ē-kwăn'ĭ-mŭs), a. [L aequanimus, aequanimus; fr. aequus equal + animus mind.] 1. Of an even, composed frame of mind; of a steady temper; not easily elated or depressed. Rare.

e'quant (ē'kwănt), n. [L. aequans, -antis, p. pr. of aequare. See EQUATE.] Ptolemaic Astron. A circle around whose circumference a planet or the center of an epicycle was conceived to move uniformly, — called also eccentric equator.

e-quate' (ē-kwāt'), v. t.; E-QUAT'ED (-kwāt'ĕd); E-QUAT'ING (-kwāt'ĭng). [L. aequatus, p. p. of aequare to make level or equal, fr. aequus level, equal. See EQUAL.] 1. To make equal, or to represent as equal or equivalent; as, to equate two propositions or statements.

Palgrave gives both scrolle and scrowe and equates both to F[rench] rolle. Skeat (Etymol. Dict.)

2. To make such an allowance or correction in as will reduce to a common standard of comparison; to reduce to mean time or motion; as, to equate lines of railroad for grades or curves; equated distances.

equating for curves, Railroad Engin., adding a specified amount (as half a mile for each 360 degrees of curvature) in order to estimate the increased amount of work due to curved track, as a basis for division of charges between different sections of a through route. — e. for grades, Railroad Engin., adding a specified amount (as one mile for each 20 feet of ascent) in order to estimate the increased amount of work due to differences of level. — e. motion, Mach., a differential gear or motion.

e-qua'tion (ē-kwā'shŭn; -zhŭn; 277), n. [L aequatio an equalizing: cf. F. équation equation. See EQUATE.] 1. Act or process of making, or state of being, equal or balanced; equality; equilibrium.

Again the golden day resumed its right,
And ruled in just equation with the night. Rowe

2. Specif., Econ., the process of making two independent variables equal each to the other, as in the equation of demand and supply, where competition within the limits of any given market adjusts the price so that one of these things is equal to the other.

3. Math. An expression of equality between two magnitudes or operations, the sign = being placed between them; as, a binomial equation; a quadratic equation.

4. Astron. a A quantity applied in computing the mean place or other element of a celestial body; that is, any of several quantities added to, or taken from, its position (calculated on the hypothesis of uniform motion), in order to find its true position resulting from its unequal motion. b The process of applying such a correction.

5. Logic. a Any formal expression of equality or of the hypothetical sameness of two expressions.

The equation . . is a comparison of numerable relations in the abstract, and therefore corresponds not to any form of singular or perceptive judgment, but only to a universal judgment, and more especially to the pure hypothetical. B. Bosanquet.

b Symbolic Logic. The expression of a proposition or of the relation between propositions in form analogous to an algebraic equation.

6. Chem. An expression representing a chemical reaction quantitatively by means of chemical symbols, the formulæ of the reacting substances being placed on the left, and those of the products on the right, of the sign = or —›.

Ep'o-moph'o-rus (ĕp'ŏ-mŏf'ŏ-rŭs), n. [NL.; epi- + omo- + Gr. φορός bearing.] Zool. A genus of African fruit bats in which the males have large distensible pharyngeal air sacs.

ep'o-nych'i-um (-nĭk'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL. See EPI-; ONYX.] Anat. The thickened layer of epitrichium over the developing finger or toe nail, disappearing before birth except over the base of the nail, where it persists as a narrow band called the perionyx.

eponyme. † EPONYM.

ep-on'y-mism (ĕp-ŏn'ĭ-mĭz'm), n. = EPONYMY. [ONYM, 1.]

ep-on'y-mist (-mĭst), n. = EPI-ep-on'y-mize (-mīz), v. t. See -IZE.

ep-on'y-mus (-mŭs), n.; pl. -MI (-mī). [NL.] = EPONYM.

E-po'peus (ē-pō'pūs; -pē-ŭs), n. [Gr. Ἐπωπεύς.] Gr. Myth. The king of Sicyon with whom Antiope found refuge.

ep'o-poe'an (ĕp'ŏ-p ē'ȧ n), a. [Gr ἐποποιός an epic poet.] Befitting an epic poet. Rare.

ep'o-poe'ist, n. [Gr. ἐποποιΐα epic poetry, fr. ἐποποιός an epic poet + -ist.] An epic poet.

‖ ep-op'ta (ĕp-ŏp'tȧ),n.; pl. -TÆ (-tē). [LL.] An epopt.

ep-op'tes (ĕp-ŏp'tēz), n. [NL.] = EPOPT.

ep-op'tist (-tĭst), n. = EPOPT.

e-po'rose (ē-pō'rōs), a. [e- + L. porus pore.] Without pores.

e-pote', v. t. [L. epotare, epotatum, to drink.] To drink up. Obs. —ep'o-ta'tion (ĕp'ŏ-tā'shŭn), n. e'pou-ven'ta-ble, a. [F. épouvantable.] Terrifying. Obs.

epp. Abbr. Epistles.

eppale, epple. † APPLE.

‖ ep-pur' si mo've! (ĕp-pōōr' sē mō'vā), or e pur' si muo've! (ā pōōr' sē mwō'vā). [It.] And yet it does move! — an exclamation fictitiously attributed to Galileo after his famous recantation of the Copernican theory e-pru'i-nose', a. [e- + pruinose.] Not pruinose; free from frost.

‖ é'pris' (ā'prē'), masc., é'prise' (ā'prēz'), fem., a. Smitten; enamored; captivated.

E-pro'bos-cid'e-a, n. pl. [NL.; e- + Proboscidea.] Zool. A small suborder of Diptera parasitic on mammals, birds, and honeybees. Bat ticks are examples.

Ep'som, n. Short for EPSOM SALTS.

Ep'ta-tre'tus (ĕp'tȧ-trē'tŭs), n [NL., irreg. fr Gr. ἑπτά seven + τρητός perforated, i. e. gills.] Zool. A genus of hagfishes, in which the gill pouches (6 to 14 in number) have separate external openings. It constitutes a family, Ep'ta-tret'i-dæ (-trĕt'ĭ-dē). Bdellostoma is a synonym.

ep'u-la-ry (ĕp'ū-lȧ-rĭ), a [L. epularis, fr. epulum a feast.] Pertaining to feasting. Rare.

Vergil (Æneid, i. 79).

e'pu-lo'sis (ē'pū-lō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐπουλώσις, fr. ἐπουλοῦσθαι to scar over or heal.] Med. Cicatrization.

ep'u-lot'ic (-lŏt'ĭk), a. Also, Obs., ep'u-lot'i-cal [Gr. ἐπουλωτικός.] Promoting the skinning over or healing of sores; as, an epulotic ointment. — n An epulotic agent.

e-pu'pil-late (ē-pū'pĭl-āt), a. [e- + L. pupilla pupil.] Zool Having no pupil; — of a colorless or with no central dot, or ocellus.

ep-u'ral (ĕp-ū'rȧl), a. [epi- + Gr. οὐρά tail.] Anat Situated on the dorsal side of the tail. — n. An equal bone.

ep'u-rate (ĕp'ū-r āt), v. t. [F. épurer.] Rare To purify — ep'u-ra'tion (-rā'shŭn), n Rare.

E'py-or'nis. Var. of ÆPYORNIS.

e'qua-bl. Equable. Ref. Sp.

e'qua-ble-ness, n. See -NESS.

e'qua-bly, adv. of EQUABLE.

equacion, -cioun. † EQUATION.

e-quæ'val (ē-k w ē'v ȧ l), e'qui-æ'val (ē'k w ĭ-ē'v ȧ l), a. [L. aequaevus: aequus equal + aevum age.] Of equal age. Rare.

e'qual-a'qual (ē'kwȧl-a'kwȧl), a. Alike. Scot.

e'qual-a'qual, v. i. To make things equal Scot

e'qual-ing, e'qual-ling, p. pr. & vb. n. of EQUAL. — equaling file. See FILE, tool.

e'qual-ist, n. One who holds that the persons or things considered are equal. Rare.

e'qual-ness, n. See -NESS.

e-quat'a-ble (ē-kwāt'ȧ-b'l), a. See -ABLE.

which should be read "give," not "are equal to." To indicate that the reaction is reversible, the symbol ⟺ is substituted for the equality sign. The weights of each element should be the same on both sides of the equation.

equation of achromaticity, one that connects or establishes the relation between the elements of a combination of lenses, rendering it achromatic. — e. of a curve, surface, etc., Math., an equation expressing the relation between the coördinates for every point of the curve, surface, etc. — e. of continuity, Math., the hydrodynamic equation $\frac{d\rho}{dt} + \frac{d\rho u}{dx} + \frac{d\rho v}{dy} + \frac{d\rho w}{dz} = 0$, where t is time, ρ density, x, y, z, rectangular coördinates, and u, v, w, corresponding components of velocity. It declares that if there be no sinks nor sources within any closed surface, the change in the amount of fluid contained equals the flow through the surface. — e. of differences, Math., an equation whose roots are the squared differences of roots of an algebraic equation. — e. of equinoxes, Astron., the difference between the mean and apparent places of the equinoxes. — e. of life. See PROBABLE LIFE. — e. of light, Astron., correction to a planet's position on account of the motion of light. — e. of payments, Arith., the process of finding the mean time of payment of several sums due at different times. — e. of (or to) the center or centre. a Anc. Astron. Difference between true and mean place of center of epicycle. b Astron. The difference between the place of a planet as supposed to move uniformly in a circle, and its place as moving in an ellipse; the difference between the true and the mean anomaly. — e. of time, Astron., the difference between mean solar time and apparent or true solar time. — equations of condition. Math. a Equations formed for deducing the most probable values of certain quantities from others on which they depend, when different sets of the latter, as given by observation, would yield different values of the quantities sought, the number of equations that may be found being greater than the number of unknown quantities. b Equations declaring the existence of certain conditions or relations that hold among the magnitudes, particularly the parameters, appearing in an equation or equations. c Equations expressing observations as taken under certain conditions. d Equations that state the effect, on the motion of a system, of rigid connections between certain parts. — equations of motion, in dynamics, differential equations that connect forces and accelerations.

equational box. = EQUATION BOX. — e logic. = SYMBOLIC LOGIC.

equation box. Spinning. An epicyclic differential gearing used in bobbin-and-fly frames for regulating the twist of the yarn. There are several varieties.

equation clock or watch. A timepiece made to exhibit the differences between mean solar and apparent solar time.

equation price. Econ. The price reached by the adjusting action of competition in any market at any time, or in a unit of time, such that the demand and supply become equal at that price; — so called by Mill. Called temporary equilibrium price by Marshall.

e-qua'tor (ē-kwā'tŭr), n. [L. aequator one who equalizes · cf. F. équateur equator. See EQUATE.] 1. Geog. An imaginary great circle on the earth's surface, everywhere equally distant from the two poles, and dividing the earth's surface into the northern and southern hemispheres. It is the line from which latitudes are reckoned, its own latitude being everywhere 0°.

2. Astron. The great circle of the celestial sphere, coincident with the plane of the earth's equator, — so called because when the sun is crossing it day and night are everywhere of equal length; hence called also the equinoctial, and on maps, globes, etc., the equinoctial line.

3. Geom. The circle, on a surface of revolution, that bisects its meridians.

4. Any circle or circular band dividing the surface of a body into two equal and symmetrical parts, in the manner of the equator of a sphere.

equator of heat. Meteor. = THERMAL EQUATOR. — e. of the heavens. = EQUATOR, n., 2 — e. of the sun or of a planet, Astron., the great circle whose plane is perpendicular to its axis of revolution.

e'qua-to'ri-al (ē'kwā-tō'rĭ-ăl, 201), a. Of or pertaining to the equator, as, equatorial climates; also, pertaining to an equatorial instrument.

equatorial horizontal parallax, Astron, the angle at the center of a celestial body subtended by the earth's equatorial radius. — e. plate, Biol., in mitosis, the group of chromosomes when arranged in the equatorial plane of the spindle.

e'qua-to'ri-al, sometimes, esp in English works, e'qua-to're-al (-rē-ăl), n. Astron. An instrument consisting of a telescope so mounted as to have two axes of motion at right angles to each other, one of them (the polaxis) parallel to the earth's axis, and each carrying a graduated circle, the one indicating declination (declination circle), and the other right ascension, or the hour angle (the hour circle); so that the telescope may be directed, even in the daytime, to any star or other object whose right ascension and declination are known. Motion in right ascension is generally communicated by clockwork, to keep the object stationary in the field of view. Called also an equatorial telescope. In the ordinary type, sometimes called the German equatorial, the declination case is attached to the upper end of the polaxis, which overhangs or projects beyond its bearing. In the English equatorial the declination axis is attached to the polaxis between the bearings of the latter. The term equatorial, or equatorial instrument, is sometimes applied to any astronomical instrument which has its principal axis of rotation parallel to the axis of the earth e'qua-to'ri-al cou'dé' (kōō'dā'). [F. coudé, p. p. of couder to bend.] A type of equatorial telescope devised by Loewy of Paris, in which the polar and declination axes form the tube, and the rays from the object glass suffer reflection from two plane mirrors, the eyepiece being stationary within a building, while the instrument itself is without.

eq'uer-ry (ĕk'wĕr-ĭ; ē-kwĕr'ĭ; 277), n.; pl. -RIES (-ĭz). [F. écurie stable, OF. escuerie, escuierie, stable, duties of a squire, gathering of squires, LL. (assumed) scutaria. The English word has been influenced by L. equus horse. See ESQUIRE, SQUIRE.] 1. A large stable or lodge for horses. Obs.

2 An officer of princes or nobles, charged with the care of their horses. In England equerries are officers of the royal household in the department of the Master of the Horse.

e-ques'tri-an (ē-kwĕs'trĭ-ăn), a. [L. equester, fr. equus horseman, fr. equus horse. See EQUINE.] 1. Of or pertaining to horses or horsemen, or horsemanship; as, equestrian feats, or games.

2. Being or riding on horseback; mounted; as, an equestrian statue.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spectator.

3. Of, pertaining to, or composed of, knights, or equites.

e-ques'tri-an, n. One who rides on horseback; a horseman; a rider; specif., an equestrian acrobat.

equestrian star Bot. Any species of Hippeastrum, esp. H. equestre. See HIPPEASTRUM.

e-ques'tri-enne' (ē-kwĕs'trĭ-ĕn'), n. [Formed after analogy of the French language.] A female equestrian; a horsewoman.

e'qui- (ē'kwĭ-). [L. aequus equal. See EQUAL.] A prefix, meaning having equal, equally.

e'qui-an'gu-lar (-ăn'gŭ-lăr), a. [equi- + angular.] Having only equal angles; as, a square is equiangular.

equiangular spiral, a plane curve that cuts all its radii vectores at the same angle; — called also logarithmic spiral, from its polar equation, $\theta = \tan a \log \frac{r}{a}$.

e'qui-an'gu-lar'i-ty (-ăn'gŭ-lăr'ĭ-tĭ), n. Fact or property of being equiangular.

e'qui-an'har-mon'ic (-ăn'här-mŏn'ĭk), a. [equi- + anharmonic.] Math. a Having the same anharmonic ratio; projective. b Having the imaginary cube roots of —1 as values of the anharmonic ratio, one, at least, of the four elements being imaginary.

e'qui-bal'ance (-băl'ăns), n. [equi- + balance.] Equal weight; equiponderance.

e'qui-bal'ance, v. t., E'QUI-BAL'ANCED (-ănst); E'QUI-BAL'ANC-ING (-ăn-sĭng). To make of equal weight; to balance equally; to counterbalance; equiponderate.

e'qui-cres'cent (-krĕs'ĕnt), a. [equi- + crescent.] Math Increasing uniformly, by equal increments, or at the same rate; as, an equicrescent variable.

Eq'ui-dæ (ĕk'wĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. equus horse.] Zool. A family of perissodactyl ungulate mammals, consisting of the single existing genus Equus (which includes the horse, asses, and zebras) and a greater or less number of related extinct genera; the horse family. See HORSE. Its existing members are sharply distinguished from the other existing perissodactyls (the rhinoceroses and tapirs) by their comparatively slender and agile build, hypsodont grinding teeth with the grooves between the ridges filled with cement, the fusion of the bones of the forearm and shank (with a reduction of the ulna and fibula), and, above all, in the reduction of each foot to a single functional digit. They walk upon the tip of the greatly enlarged middle digit of each foot, the other digits being entirely wanting except for rudiments (the splint bones) of the metapodials of the second and fourth. The genera Hyracotherium (Lower Eocene), Protorohippus (Middle Eocene), Mesohippus (Oligocene), Miohippus, Desmatippus, and Protohippus (Miocene), and Pliohippus (Pliocene) form a series showing the descent of the modern horses from smaller, less specialized, three-toed and four-toed forms ancestral also to the tapirs and rhinoceroses.

e'qui-dif'fer-ent (ē'kwĭ-dĭf'ẽr-ĕnt), a. [equi- + different.] Having equal differences; as, an arithmetical progression is equidifferent.

e'qui-dis'tant (-tănt), a. [L. aequidistans, -antis; aequus equal + distans distant: cf. F. équidistant] Equally distant. — e'qui-dis'tant-ly, adv.

e'qui-di-ur'nal (-dī-ûr'năl), a. [equi- + diurnal.] Pert. to the time of equal day and night; — applied to the equinoctial line.

e'qui-form (ē'kwĭ-fôrm) } a. [L. aequiformis; aequus equal + forma form.] Having the same form; uniform. — e'qui-for'mi-ty (-mĭ-tĭ), n.

e'qui-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a. [equi- + graphic.] Representing equal areas by equal spaces; as, an equigraphic map; an equigraphic projection.

e'qui-lat'er-al (-lăt'ẽr-ăl), a. [L. aequilateralis; aequus equal + latus, lateris, side. cf. F. équilatéral.] 1. a Having all the sides equal; as, an equilateral triangle; an equilateral polygon. See TRIANGLE, Illust. b Having the two sides equal, as a surface divisible by a longitudinal median line into two halves of the same form.

2. Specif.: Zoöl. Designating a bivalve shell in which a transverse line drawn through the apex of the umbo divides the valve into two equal and symmetrical parts.

equilateral arch. See POINTED ARCH, and ARCH, Illust. (6). — e hyperbola, Geom., one with its asymptotes at right angles, and consequently congruent with its conjugate.

e'qui-lat'er-al, n. A side exactly corresponding, or equal, to others; also, a figure of equal sides.

e-quil'i-brant (ē-kwĭl'ĭ-brănt), n. [See EQUILIBRATE.] Physics. Any force or system of forces which is capable of balancing a given force or system of forces.

e'qui-li'brate (ē'kwĭ-lĭ'brāt), v. t.; -LI'BRAT-ED (-brāt-ĕd); -LI'BRAT-ING (-brāt-ĭng). [L. aequilibratus in equilibrium; aequus equal + libra balance. See EQUILIBRIUM.] 1. To balance, as two scales, sides, or ends; to keep even with equal weight on each side; to keep in equipoise; as, to equilibrate weights.

An equilibrated system of faiths. J. Martineau.

2. To be balanced with; to counterbalance; as, one weight equilibrates another.

e'qui-li'brate (ē'kwĭ-lĭ'brāt), v. i. To be in equipoise.

e'qui-li-bra'tion (-lĭ-brā'shŭn), n. Act of keeping a balance, or state of being balanced; equipoise.

In . . . running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. J. Denham.

e'qui-li'bra-tor (-lĭ'brā-tẽr), n. Any of various devices for maintaining or restoring equilibrium, as in a flying machine, or between the local and line currents in a phototelegraphic apparatus.

e'qui-li'bra-to-ry (-lĭ'brā-tō-rĭ), a. Serving to cause or maintain equilibrium.

e'qui-lib'ri-al (-lĭb'rĭ-ăl), a. Of or pert. to equilibration.

e-quil'i-brist (ē-kwĭl'ĭ-brĭst; 277), n. [Cf. F. équilibriste.] One who balances himself in unnatural positions and hazardous movements; a balancer.

When the equilibrist balances a rod upon his finger Stewart.

e'qui-lib'ri-stat (ē'kwĭ-lĭb'rĭ-stăt), n. [equilibrium + Gr. στατός standing still.] An instrument, consisting essentially of a U tube with capillary ends, for determining if a railroad car is, or is not, in a state of equilibrium when rounding a curve, and for measuring the amount of deviation, if any, from such a state. W. M. Camp.

e-quil'i-bris'tic (ē-kwĭl'ĭ-brĭs'tĭk), a. Of or pertaining to an equilibrist.

e'qui-lib'ri-um (ē'kwĭ-lĭb'rĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. E. -UMS (-ŭmz), L. -RIA (-ă). [L. aequilibrium, fr. aequilibris in equilibrium, level; aequus equal + libra balance. See EQUAL; LIBRATE.]

Equilibrium. 1 Stable; 2 Unstable; 3 Neutral; g Center of Gravity

1. Phys. Science. A state of balance between opposing forces or actions, either static, as in the case of a body acted on by forces whose resultant is zero, or dynamic, as in a reversible chemical reaction when the velocities in both directions are equal. The equilibrium of a body is said to be stable, if, on being slightly displaced, it tends to return to its original position; unstable, if it tends to move farther from that position; and neutral or indifferent, if it remains in equilibrium after displacement.

2. Hence, a state of balance, or even adjustment, between opposing forces, influences, interests, etc., of any kind; balance; as, the political equilibrium of Europe.

3. A state of indecision or doubt due to the balancing of motives or reasons; mental neutrality; suspense.

4. Econ. A condition in which opposing economic forces, as of desire and effort, are exactly balanced. The equilibrium is called stable when there is a tendency to return to it upon any slight departure from it. Often confused with equation (which see), which implies an equality of quantities instead of a balance of forces.

Syn. — See BALANCE.

equilibrium of demand and supply, Econ., equilibrium between the forces affecting demand and supply; — a phrase used for brevity by Marshall equilibrium valve. Mech. a = BALANCE VALVE. b A valve for permitting air, steam, water, etc., to pass into or out of a chamber so as to establish or maintain equal pressure within and without.

e'qui-mo'lar (ē'kwĭ-mō'lăr), a. Chem. Equimolecular.

e'qui-mo-lec'u-lar (-mō-lĕk'ū-lăr), a. [equi- + molecular.] Chem. Denoting the presence of quantities of substances proportional to their molecular weights.

e'qui-mo-men'tal (-mō-mĕn'tăl), a. [equi- + momental.] Mech. Having equal moments of inertia.

equimomental cone (of a given rigid body), a conical surface that has any given vertex, and is described by a straight line which moves in such manner that the moment of inertia of the given rigid body about the line is in all its positions the same. — e. ellipsoid, Math, one whose moment of inertia about any axis equals that of a given body.

e'qui-mul'ti-ple (-mŭl'tĭ-p'l), a. [equi- + multiple.] Multiplied by the same number or quantity.

e'qui-mul'ti-ple, n. Math. One of the products of two or more quantities multiplied by the same number or quantity. Thus, 7 × 2, or 14, and 7 × 4, or 28, are equimultiples of 2 and 4.

e'quine (ē'kwīn; 277), a. [L. equinus, fr. equus horse; akin to Gr. ἵππος, Skr. açva, OS. ehu, AS. eoh, Icel. jõr, OIr. ech. Cf. Equilibrium. 1 Stable; 2 Unstable; 3 Neutral; g Center of Gravity

1. Phys. Science. A state of balance between opposing forces or actions, either static, as in the case of a body acted on by forces whose resultant is zero, or dynamic, as in a reversible chemical reaction when the velocities in both directions are equal. The equilibrium of a body is said to be stable, if, on being slightly displaced, it tends to return to its original position; unstable, if it tends to move farther from that position; and neutral or indifferent, if it remains in equilibrium after displacement.

2. Hence, a state of balance, or even adjustment, between opposing forces, influences, interests, etc., of any kind; balance; as, the political equilibrium of Europe.

3. A state of indecision or doubt due to the balancing of motives or reasons; mental neutrality; suspense.

4. Econ. A condition in which opposing economic forces, as of desire and effort, are exactly balanced. The equilibrium is called stable when there is a tendency to return to it upon any slight departure from it. Often confused with equation (which see), which implies an equality of quantities instead of a balance of forces.

Syn. — See BALANCE.

equilibrium of demand and supply, Econ., equilibrium between the forces affecting demand and supply; — a phrase used for brevity by Marshall equilibrium valve. Mech. a = BALANCE VALVE. b A valve for permitting air, steam, water, etc., to pass into or out of a chamber so as to establish or maintain equal pressure within and without.

eq′ui-ta′tion (-tā′shŭn), n. [L. equitatio: cf. F. équitation.] Act or art of riding on horseback; horsemanship.

eq′ui-tes (ĕk′wĭ-tēz), n. pl. [L., pl. of eques a horseman.] Rom. Hist. Members of a military order serving as cavalry and endowed with special privileges and emoluments. Originally they were probably chosen from among patricians able to furnish their own mounts, but later from the richest class of citizens, to whom eventually, as members of the ‖ or′do e-ques′ter, the title came to be applied whether they served as cavalry or not. Only the cavalry, however, or ‖ e′qui-tes e′quo pu′bli-co (ĕk′wĭ-tēz ē′kwō pŭb′lĭ-kō) (equites furnished with horses at public cost), were important under the empire. The term is often translated knights.

eq′ui-ty (ĕk′wĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [F. équité, L. aequitas, fr. aequus even, equal. See EQUAL.] 1. State or quality of being equal or fair; fairness in dealing with or deciding between others; impartiality.

Christianity secures both the private interests of men and the public peace, enforcing all justice and equity Tillotson.

2. That which is equitable or fair; what is right or due according to impartial dealing or decision.

3. Equality of rights; natural justice or right; the giving, or desiring to give, to each man his due, according to the natural law.

4. Law. In England (and Ireland) and the United States, the system of law which originated in the extraordinary justice formerly administered by the king's chancellor, and was subsequently developed into a body of rules supplementary to or aiding the common and statute law. The original purpose of the extraordinary justice of the chancellors was to overcome or avoid some of the impediments to justice arising from the rigid formality and limitations that rested upon the common-law procedure and administration of justice, and the justice administered was at first understood to accord with natural justice or right (sense 3 above). With the development into a system of law hardly less rigid and definite than that of the law courts, whose jurisdiction it supplements and often overrides, the notion of abstract justice became of minor importance in theory and practice, and the term equity came to designate the settled and formal system of legal and procedural rules and doctrines according to which justice would be administered within certain well-defined limits of jurisdiction. In England the body of rules and doctrines of equity were incorporated into the law of the land by the Judicature Act of 1873, and in the United States the same merging of law and equity has taken place more or less completely in most of the States. (See CHANCERY, n., 2 & 3.) The judges of the common-law courts in England for many years bitterly opposed the exercise of the equity functions of the chancellor and equity courts, and at times censured the equity system as uncertain and arbitrary; and the fictions of the common law were to some extent due to the endeavor to avoid the necessity for the equity courts.

Equity is a relative thing. For law we have a measure, we know what to trust to; equity is according to the conscience of him that is chancellor, and as that is larger or narrower, so is equity. 'T is all one as if they should make the standard for the measure a chancellor's foot. What an uncertain measure would this be! One chancellor has a long foot, another a short foot, a third an indifferent foot. 'T is the same thing in a chancellor's conscience Lord Selden.

5. Hence, any body of legal doctrines and rules similarly developed to enlarge, supplement, or override a system of law which has become too narrow and rigid in its scope, esp that developed by the Roman prætors into the jus honorarium. See EDICT, PRÆTOR.

6. Law. An equitable claim or right, an equity of redemption; as, an equity to a settlement, or wife's equity, etc.

Syn. — Rights, impartiality, rectitude, fairness, honesty, uprightness. See JUSTICE.

equity follows the law. Law. = AEQUITAS SEQUITUR LEGEM. — e. of redemption. Law. a The right, which is enforced by equity, of a mortgagor to redeem the mortgaged land by payment of the principal and interest. This equitable right is not cut off by the land being forfeited and the mortgagee's title becoming absolute at law, nor by any foreclosure proceedings except the so-called strict foreclosure or one of the various procedures provided by statute for that purpose. If the mortgagee takes possession of the land upon the forfeiture, the equity of redemption will be cut off by his holding it as required by the Statute of Limitations. b Hence, the interest or estate remaining to the mortgagor in property mortgaged by him, or the value of such interest.

e-quiv′a-lence (ē-kwĭv′ă-lĕns), e-quiv′a-len-cy (-lĕn-sĭ), n [Cf. F. équivalence, LL. aequivalentia.] 1. Condition of being equal; equality of worth, value, signification, or force, as, an equivalence of definitions.

2. Equal power, force, or amount.

3. Chem. a Equality of valence. b = VALENCE. c = EQUIVALENT, n., 2 b. Rare.

4. Math. The doctrine of equivalent magnitudes.

e-quiv′a-lent (-lĕnt), a. [L. aequivalens, -entis, p. pr. of aequivalere to have equal power; aequus equal + valere to be strong; be worth: cf. F. équivalent See EQUAL; VALIANT.] 1. Equal in worth or value, force, power, effect, import, and the like; alike in significance and value; of the same import or meaning.

For now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent South

2. Geom. Equal in measure but not admitting of superposition; — applied to magnitudes; as, a square may be equivalent to a triangle.

3. Geol. & Paleon. Contemporaneous; — said of strata.

4. Math. That may be set in one-to-one correspondence with each other; — said of two aggregates and denoted by the wave, ∼.

Syn. — See IDENTICAL.

equivalent bending moment, Engin. Design, the bending moment that would cause the greater principal stress in a shaft that is subjected to combined torsion and bending It is numerically one half the equivalent twisting moment. — e. configurations (with respect to a group), Math, configurations convertible one into another by operations of the given group. — e. eccentric, Mech., an imaginary single eccentric which would give nearly the same motion to the valve as it gets actually from a link motion operated by two eccentrics. It is used in calculation to give easy approximate solutions to link-motion problems. — e. evaporation, Steam Boilers. the amount of water which would have been evaporated from and at 212° F. had the feed water been at a temperature of 212° F., and the steam dry and at atmospheric pressure. — e. girder, Nav. Arch., a diagrammatic representation of the distribution of the material forming the section of a ship relative to the neutral axis. Two such diagrams are usually drawn, one for hogging and the other for sagging. E. L. Attwood. — e. groups of points, Math., any two groups (corresponding to two values of n) of points in which a fundamental curve F is cut by curves of the pencil $\phi_1 - w\,\phi_2 = 0$, where the ϕ's are rational polynomials in x and y; — also called coresidual groups. — e. number or weight. = EQUIVALENT, n., 2 & 3. — e. sine wave, an alternating current varying according to a sine law, having the same frequency and effective or virtual value as an actual non-sine wave. — e. twisting moment, Engin. Design, a moment which would produce on a shaft the same greatest direct stress as combined twisting and bending moments (as when a power-transmitting shaft carries a pulley). It takes the place of the simple twisting moment in the equation connecting the dimensions of the shaft with the moment acting on it and the stress produced thereby. In reality it is not a twisting moment at all, but a bending moment. It, $= M + \sqrt{M^2 + T^2}$, where M = simple bending moment, and T = simple twisting moment, or torque, on the shaft.

e-quiv'a-lent (ē-kwĭv'a-lĕnt), n. 1. Something equivalent; that which is equal in value, worth, weight, or force; as, to offer an equivalent for damage done.

2. Chem. One of the comparative quantities, by weight, of different elements which possess the same chemical value, as determined by actual experiment and reference to the same standard (the standard commonly being, hydrogen = 1). Specif.: a The comparative weight by which one element replaces another in any particular compound; thus, as zinc replaces hydrogen in hydrochloric acid, their equivalents are 32.5 and 1. b The combining proportion by weight of an element, or the number expressing this proportion, in any particular compound; combining weight; as, the equivalents of hydrogen and oxygen in water are respectively 1 and 8, and in hydrogen dioxide 1 and 16. This term was adopted by Wollaston to avoid using the conjectural expression atomic weight, with which, however, for a time it was practically synonymous. The attempt to limit the term to the meaning of a universally comparative combining weight failed, because of the possibility of several compounds of the same substances by reason of the variation in combining power which most elements exhibit. The equivalent was really identical with, or a multiple or submultiple of, the atomic weight.

3. Chem. A combining weight of a radical or compound; as, in an acid salt two or more equivalents of acid unite with one or more equivalents of base; specif., that weight of a compound which reacts with one equivalent of an element.

e-quiv'o-cal (ē-kwĭv'ō-kăl), a. [L. aequivocus; aequus equal + vocare to call, akin to L. vox voice. See EQUAL; VOICE; cf. EQUIVOQUE.] 1. Merely nominal. Obs.

2. Having two or more significations equally applicable; capable of double interpretation; of doubtful meaning; ambiguous, as, equivocal words; an equivocal sentence or remark.

> For the beauties of Shakespeare are not of so dim or equivocal a nature as to be visible only to learned eyes Jeffrey.

3. Capable of being ascribed to different motives, or of signifying opposite feelings, purposes, or characters; deserving to be suspected; as, his actions are equivocal.

> "Equivocal repentances." Milton.

4. Uncertain as an indication or sign; doubtful; undetermined. "How equivocal a test." Burke.

5. Questionable; suspicious. Rare.

Syn.—Doubtful, dubious, indeterminate, uncertain, puzzling, perplexing, obscure, mysterious.—EQUIVOCAL, AMBIGUOUS, PROBLEMATIC, ENIGMATIC. That is AMBIGUOUS which admits of more than one interpretation; that is EQUIVOCAL which conveys (often with intent to deceive), along with a given idea, another quite different one with equal clearness and propriety; as, "by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase, as 'Well, well, we know,' or, 'We could, an if we would' . . . or such ambiguous giving out" (Shak.); "These sentences, . . . being strong on both sides, are equivocal" (id.), the responses of the Delphic oracle were often both ambiguous and equivocal. That is PROBLEMATICAL whose existence or meaning is doubtful or (esp.) whose outcome or event is uncertain; ENIGMATIC, which is baffling, inscrutable, or obscure; as, "Alas, that there should be teachers in Israel . . . to whom this world-ancient fact is still problematical, or even deniable!" (Carlyle); "puzzling out the threats, or the enigmatic promises, of a starry sky" (W. Pater). See DOUBTFUL, EQUIVOCATE.

equivocal chord, Music, a chord which can be resolved into several distinct keys, since its intervals, being all minor thirds, do not clearly indicate its fundamental tone or root; the chord of the diminished triad, and the diminished seventh.

e-quiv'o-cal, n. A word or expression capable of different meanings; an ambiguous term; an equivoque.

> In languages of great ductility, equivocals like that just referred to are rarely found. Fitzed Hall.

e-quiv'o-cate (ē-kwĭv'ō-kāt), v. i.; E-QUIV'O-CAT'ED (-kāt'-ĕd); E-QUIV'O-CAT'ING (-kāt'ĭng). [LL. aequivocatus, p. p. of aequivocare to call by the same name, fr. L. aequivocus. See EQUIVOCAL, a.] To use equivocal or ambiguous language; to express one's self in terms which admit of different interpretations, esp. with intent to deceive; to be willfully misleading by use of double meanings.

> All that Garnet had to say for him was that he supposed he meant to equivocate. Bp. Stillingfleet

Syn.—Evade, shuffle, quibble, dodge, shift, trifle.—EQUIVOCATE, PREVARICATE, PALTER. To EQUIVOCATE is properly to say one thing and mean another; to PREVARICATE is to evade the truth, esp. by shuffling or quibbling; to PALTER (with) is to play fast and loose or trifle with the truth; as "You . . . equivocate; for 'real,' as you now the word expound, from solid substance dwindles to a sound" (Dryden); "Thou dost prevaricate . . . thou wouldst sophistically imply both are unlawful" (Butler); "dodge and palter in the shifts of lowness" (Shak.). See EQUIVOCAL, EVADE, FALSITY.

e-quiv'o-cate, v. t. To render equivocal or ambiguous.

e-quiv'o-ca'tion (-kā'shŭn), n. [Cf. OF. equivocation equivocalness.] 1. Ambiguity. Obs.

2. The use of expressions susceptible of a double signification, esp. with a purpose to mislead.

3. Logic. A fallacy arising from the use of a word that may be taken in more than one meaning. Cf. AMPHIBOLOGY.

Syn.—Prevarication, shuffling, evasion, quibbling.

e-quiv'o-ca'tor (ē-kwĭv'ō-kā'tẽr), n. One who equivocates.

> Here's an equivocator that could swear in both the scales against either scale, yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shak.

e-quiv'o-ca-to-ry (-ka-tō-rĭ), a. Indicating, or characterized by, equivocation.

eq'ui-voque } (ĕk'wĭ-vōk; ē'kwĭ-) n. [L. aequivocus equiv-eq'ui-voke } ocal: cf. F. équivoque, a. & n. See EQUIVOCAL.] 1. A thing with the same name as another, but of different nature. Obs.

2. Double meaning; ambiguity; equivocation; also, a case of this; an equivocation; a quibble.

3. An ambiguous term; a word susceptible of different interpretations.

E-quu'le-us (ē-kwōō'lē-ŭs), n.; gen. -LEI (-ī). [L., a colt; dim. of equus horse.] Astron. An equatorial constellation between Delphinus and Aquarius; the Little Horse.

E-quu'le-us Pic-to'ris (pĭk-tō'rĭs). [NL., the painter's easel.] Astron. A southern constellation between Columba and Dorado.

E'quus (ē'kwŭs), n. [L., horse.] Zoöl. The typical genus of the horse family, consisting of the horse, asses, and zebras, and certain extinct species. It first appears in the Pliocene period. See EQUIDÆ, HORSE.

-er (-ẽr). 1. [AS. -ere, akin to G. -er, Goth. -areis, L. -arius.] A suffix forming: a Nouns from other nouns, with the sense of one who has to do with, esp. as a matter of trade, profession, occupation, function, etc.; as, tinn*er*, one whose occupation is with tin; hatt*er*, philologer. Such derivatives from nouns ending in w have a y before -er; as in bowy*er*, lawy*er*, sawy*er*; certain others have i; as in glazi*er*, collie*r*. See -IER. b Nouns, chiefly of modern colloquial usage, denoting things or actions related to (the meaning of the root word); as in facer, fiver, header, forty-miner. c Nouns from nouns or adjectives of place, denoting resident of, one living in; as, Londoner, southerner, villager, foreigner. d Nouns from verbs, denoting the agent, esp a person (orig. a male), machine, or implement; as, maker, player, hater, poker, blotter, grater. See Introd., Rules for Spelling, §§ 6, 7, & 8.

2. [AF. -er, OF. -ier, L. -arius, -arium.] A suffix forming nouns denoting a person (-arius) or thing (-arium) connected with; as in carpenter, usher, grocer (designating the person's name from his office or occupation), dower, garner, antiphoner.

3. [AS. -ra (in adjectives; -or in adverbs); akin to G. -er, Icel. -are, -re (in adjectives), Goth. -iza, -ôza, L. -ior, Gr. -ων, Skr. -iyas.] A suffix forming the comparative degree of adjectives and adverbs; as, warm*er*, sooner, swifter, quicker. Final e of the adjective merges with e of -er, as in later, finer; final y becomes i, as in livelier, earlier. Polysyllabic adjectives, and most adverbs, form their comparative degree periphrastically with more, as more sedately, more disastrous.

4. [AS. -rian, in inf.] A suffix forming frequentative verbs, as patter, glitter, mutter, quaver, shimmer.

e'ra (ē'rȧ), n. [LL. aera an era, in L. the items of an account, counters, pl. of aes, aeris, brass, money. See ORE.] 1. A fixed point of time from which a series of years is reckoned; an epoch.

> The foundation of Solomon's temple is conjectured by Ideler to have been an era. R. S Poole.

2. A chronologic order or system of notation computed from a given date as basis; as, the Christian era is computed from the epoch of the birth of Christ. Cf. EPOCH, 1.

3. A period of time reckoned from some particular date or epoch; a succession of years dating from some important event; as, the era of Alexander.

> The first century of our era. M Arnold

> Painting may truly be said to have opened the new era of culture. J. A. Symonds.

5. A major subdivision of geologic time; as, the Paleozoic era. See GEOLOGY, Chart.

Syn.—Time, date, period, age, dispensation. See EPOCH. Era of Good Feeling, U. S. Hist., a period under the administration of Monroe, in which there was practically only one political party. Different limits are placed upon the period by historians, some giving from 1817 to 1824, while others restrict it to from 1821 to 1824.—e. of indiction. See INDICTION.

e-ra'di-ate (ē-rā'dĭ-āt), v. i. & t.; E-RA'DI-AT'ED (-āt'ĕd); E-RA'DI-AT'ING (-āt'ĭng). [e- + radiate.] To shoot forth, as rays of light; to radiate.—e-ra'di-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n.

e-rad'i-ca-ble (ē-răd'ĭ-kȧ-b'l), a. That can be eradicated.

e-rad'i-cate (ē-răd'ĭ-kāt), v. t.; E-RAD'I-CAT'ED (-kāt'ĕd); E-RAD'I-CAT'ING (-kāt'ĭng). [L. eradicatus, p. p. of eradicare to eradicate; e out + radix, radicis, root. See RADICAL.] To pluck up by the roots, to root up or out; hence, to destroy utterly; to extirpate; as, to eradicate disease.

> This, although now an old and inveterate evil, might be eradicated by vigorous treatment Southey e-rad'i-ca'tion (-kā'shŭn), n. [L. eradicatio: cf. F. éradication.] Act of plucking up by the roots; extirpation; destruction; also, state of being eradicated, or uprooted.

e-rad'i-ca-tive (ē-răd'ĭ-kȧ-tĭv), a. Tending or serving to eradicate; curing or destroying thoroughly, as a disease or any evil.—n. Med. A medicine that effects a radical cure.

e-rad'i-ca'tor (-kā'tẽr), n. One that eradicates; specif., Agric., an implement for uprooting weeds, etc.

Er'a-gros'tis (ĕr'ȧ-grŏs'tĭs), n. [NL, fr. Gr. ἐρᾶν to love + ἄγρωστις grass.] Bot. A large genus of grasses related to Poa, but distinguished by the flattened spikelets and deciduous flowering glume. The species are widely distributed; they have little agricultural value.

E-ran'the-mum (ē-răn'thē-mŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἠράνθεμον a plant resembling camomile; ἦρ, ἔαρ, the spring + ἄνθεμον flower.] Bot. A small genus of tropical Asiatic acanthaceous shrubs or perennial herbs cultivated for their handsome white, pink, or lilac flowers, which have a slender cylindrical tube, a 5-parted limb, and two stamens. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

e-rase' (ē-rās'), v. t.; E-RASED' (-rāst'); E-RAS'ING (-rās'ĭng). [L. erasus, p. p of eradere to erase; e out + radere to scrape, scratch, shave. See RASE.] 1. To rub or scrape out, as letters or characters written, engraved, or painted; to efface; to expunge; to cross out; as, to erase a line.

2. Fig.: To obliterate; expunge; blot out.

Syn.—Blot out, rub out, wipe out, cross out, strike out, delete.—ERASE, EXPUNGE, CANCEL, EFFACE, OBLITERATE agree in the idea of removal or deletion. To ERASE is to rub or scratch out; as, to erase a word; (fig.), "Have a few years totally erased me from your memory?" (Gray). To EXPUNGE is to strike or blot out something wholly, so that it becomes as if it had never existed; as, "He seemed to have expunged their very name from his vocabulary" (T. L. Peacock). To CANCEL is lit. to cross out by lines; as, to cancel a check. To EFFACE is to make indistinct or illegible; as, to efface the inscription on a coin; "to efface the distinctions of language" (W. Pater). OBLITERATE is a stronger synonym for efface; as, "One brief impression obliterates another" (Stevenson). See DEFACE.

> Deeply she cut—but, not erased,
> The characters were still so plain. Byron.
>
> A new edition . . is printed. . . . Some superfluities I have expunged, and some faults I have corrected. Johnson.
>
> Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond. Shak.
>
> Experience, like a sea, soaks all-effacing in. M. Arnold.
> I suppose the plow has long ago obliterated the traces of sepulture. F. FitzGerald.

e-rased' (ē-rāst'), p. a. 1. Rubbed or scraped out; effaced; obliterated.

e-quiv'a-lent, v. t. To make equivalent to. Rare. [ALENT.]

e-quiv'a-lent-ly, adv. of EQUIVALENT, a. See EQUI-.

e-qui-val'ue (ē'kwĭ-văl'ū), v. t. To put an equal value on R.

They have spikes crowded in a panicle clothed with long, silky hairs. Several species, notably the wool grass (E. ravennæ), are valuable garden ornamentals. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

er'ic (ĕr'ĭk), n. [Ir. eiric.] A form of blood fine or wergild in the primitive laws of Ireland. See WERGILD.

E-ri'ca (ē-rī'kă), n. [NL., fr. L. erice heath, Gr. ἐρείκη] Bot. A very large genus of low evergreen shrubs, the true heaths, type of the Ericaceæ, natives of Europe and Africa, esp. of the Cape. They have whorls of needlelike leaves and clusters of small tubular or campanulate white, pink, or yellow flowers. They are extensively cultivated. See HEATH. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Er'i-ca'ce-æ (ĕr'ĭ-kā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See ERICA.] Bot. A family of plants, the heath family, typifying the order Ericales, and embracing about 55 genera and 1,100 species, of very wide distribution. They are herbs, shrubs, or trees having flowers with introrse anthers and superior ovary. Many of the genera are handsome ornamental shrubs, as Rhododendron, Azalea, and Kalmia. The Vacciniaceæ, or huckleberry family, and the Pyrolaceæ, or wintergreen family, are sometimes included in the Ericaceæ. — er'i-ca'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Er'i-ca'les (-lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot a In Lindley's classification, an alliance of plants including the heaths, etc. b An order of metachlamydeous dicotyledonous plants embracing the families Ericaceæ, Clethraceæ, Pyrolaceæ, Monotropaceæ, Vacciniaceæ, Lennoaceæ, and Epacridaceæ, all having the stamens free or nearly free from the corolla.

er'i-ce'tal (-sē'tăl), a. Bot. Composed of, or containing, heaths; as, an ericetal flora.

Er'ich-tho'ni-us (ĕr'ĭk-thō'nĭ-ŭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. 'Ερεχθόνιος.] Gr. Myth. An Athenian hero, generally the same as Erechtheus, although by some classic writers Erechtheus is made a descendant of Erichthonius. Erichthonius as a child was said to have been placed by Athena in a chest which was given in charge of the three daughters of Cecrops with the injunction not to look within. Two of them disobeyed, were seized with madness, and destroyed themselves. This myth was given as the ground for an important rite which Athenian girls performed and which was probably originally a fertility charm (cf. HERSE).

e-ric'o-lol (ē-rĭs'ō-lōl; -nŏl), n. [NL. Ericineæ the heath family + 2d -ol.] Chem. A colorless, peculiar-smelling oil, $C_{10}H_{10}O$, obtained from Ledum palustre, and also by the decomposition of ericolin.

e-rin'e-um (ē-rĭn'ē-ŭm), n.; pl. -EA (-ă). [NL., fr. Gr. ἐρίνεος woolly, fr. ἔριον wool.] Bot. An abnormal growth of the epidermis of plants caused by attacks of mites, esp. of the genus Phytoptus. They were formerly attributed to a fungus, for which Erineum was used as a generic name.

er'i-nite (ĕr'ĭ-nīt), n. [From Erin, Ireland, where it occurs.] Min. An emerald-green basic arsenate of copper, $Cu_3(AsO_4)_2{\cdot}2Cu(OH)_2$.

er'i-nose (ĕr'ĭ-nōs), n. [Gr. ἔριον wool + νόσος disease.] A disease of the grapevine which is caused by a mite (Phytoptus vitis) and is manifested by erinea on the leaves. See ERINEUM.

E-rin'ys (ē-rĭn'ĭs; ē-rī'nĭs; ĕr-), n.; pl. ERINYES (ē-rĭn'ĭ-ēz). [L., fr Gr. 'Ερινύς.] Gr. Relig. One of the avenging spirits who bring retribution upon those who have violated the laws of natural piety, hospitality, etc., or are guilty of perjury or homicide. Originally they were probably the vengeful ghosts of the slain or vague embodiments of the avenging powers of nature, but later they came to be conceived as snaky-haired women, pursuing the offender and inflicting madness. Their number, at first indefinite, was eventually three, Alecto, Megæra, and Tisiphone. In Athens, following the traditions established by Æschylus, they were believed to have altered their character after the trial of Orestes, ceasing to pursue with torments that bloodguiltiness to which was attached no moral guilt. In this milder character they were known to the Athenians as the Semnæ (prob. ancient local spirits) and as Eumenides (orig., doubtless, a euphemistic title). They are commonly called Furies in English usage, following Latin Furiæ.

Erinys binding Prithous in the underworld.

Er'i-o-bot'ry-a (-bŏt'rĭ-ă), n. [NL.; erio- + Gr. βότρυς a cluster (of grapes).] Bot. A small genus of Asiatic rosaceous trees distinguished by the large seeds and thin endocarp of the fruit. The most important species is the loquat (Eriobotrya japonica). See LOQUAT.

Er'i-o-cau-la'ce-æ (-kô-lā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.; erio- + Gr. καυλός, L. caulis stalk.] Bot. A family of monocotyledonous aquatic or bog herbs, the pipewort family, having clustered or tufted linear leaves and minute diclinous flowers in dense globose heads. There are 6 genera and about 340 species; the chief genera are Eriocaulon, Dupatya, and Lachnocaulon. — er'i-o-cau-la'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Er'i-o-cau'lon (-kô'lŏn), n. [NL. See ERIOCAULACEÆ.] Bot. A genus of acaulescent herbs, typifying the family Eriocaulaceæ, distinguished by having flowers with 4–6 stamens and glandular petals. They are widely distributed in warm regions. Several species are characteristic of the pine barrens of the southern United States.

Er'i-o-dic'ty-on (-dĭk'tĭ-ŏn), n. [NL.; erio- + Gr. δίκτυον a net.] Bot. A small genus of resinous boraginaceous shrubs of southern California, Lower California, and adjacent regions. They have finely reticulated leaves, often woolly beneath, and white or bluish flowers in scorpioid cymes. E. californicum is the yerba santa. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus. See YERBA SANTA.

Er'i-og'o-num (-ŏg'ō-nŭm), n. [NL.; erio- + Gr. γόνυ knee, joint; — so named in allusion to the densely woolly stems of some species, esp. at the bases of the leaves.] Bot. A large genus of acaulescent or leafy-stemmed polygonaceous herbs, having small variously clustered flowers subtended by involucres. The species are exclusively American, most of them being natives of the western United States. Also [l. c.], any plant of this genus.

er'i-om'e-ter (-ŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [erio- + -meter.] Optics. An instrument for measuring the diameters of minute particles or fibers, from the size of the colored rings produced by the diffraction of light.

Er'i-oph'o-rum (-ŏf'ō-rŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐριοφόρος wool-bearing; ἔριον wool + φέρειν to bear.] Bot. A genus of cyperaceous bog plants or sedges, called cotton grass from the cottonlike masses of spikelets, the perianth consisting of soft capillary bristles. The 10 species are natives of the Northern Hemisphere, esp. of arctic or subarctic regions. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Er'i-phy'le (-ĭf'lē), n [L., fr. Gr. 'Εριφύλη.] Gr. Myth. The wife of Amphiaraus, who foretold to her the disastrous end of the expedition against Thebes. Nevertheless she was bribed by Polynices to decide that her husband should undertake the adventure, the decision having been left to her by mutual agreement. She was slain by her son Alcmæon in revenge for the death of his father.

Er-ris'ta-lis (ē-rĭs'tă-lĭs), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A genus of dipterous insects having larvæ of the rat-tailed type. (See under RAT-TAILED.) The common drone fly (E. tenax) is the best-known species.

2 Disputatious or controversial argument.

Er'len-mey'er flask (ĕr'lĕn-mī'ĕr). A thin glass flask, flat-bottomed and cone-shaped, allowing its contents to be shaken laterally without danger of spilling; — so called from Erlenmeyer, a German chemist who invented it. See FLASK, Illust.

erl'king' (ûrl'kĭng'), n. [G. erlkonig, fr. Dan. ellekonge elfking.] A personification, in German and Scandinavian folklore, of a spirit or natural power supposed to work mischief and ruin, esp. to children.

er'mine (ûr'mĭn), n. [OF. ermine, F. hermine, perh. of German origin, cf. OHG. harmo, G. hermelin, akin to Lith. szarmů, szarmonys, weasel, AS. hearma; but more probably fr. L. Armenius Armenian; cf. LL. armelinus, armellina, hermellina, and pellis Armenia, the fur of the Armenian rat, mus Armenius, the animal being found also in Armenia.] 1. Any of several species of weasels of the northern parts of both hemispheres which (at least in the northern parts of their habitats) assume a pure white coat in winter, except for the terminal part of the tail, which always remains jet black; also, the fur of these animals when in its white condition. This fur is greatly prized for its fineness and pure white color, and to obtain it great numbers of the animals are trapped in northern Europe, Siberia, and British America. When used for ornamental purposes the black fur of the tail is generally inserted at regular intervals so that it contrasts with the white fur of the rest of the body. The European ermine is Putorius ermineus, otherwise called the greater weasel, or stoat. Important American species are P. cicognani, P. noveboracensis, and P. rixosus.

E-ro'di-um (ē-rō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [NL, fr. Gr. ἐρωδιός heron; — so named from the long-beaked fruit.] Bot. A large genus of geraniaceous herbs distinguished by the small flowers with only five perfect stamens, and by the long bearded tails of the carpels, whence they are called stork's-bill or heron's-bill. They are widely distributed in temperate and warm regions. E. cicutarium, the alfilaria, is a weed in California. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

E'ros (ē'rŏs), n.; pl. EROTES (ē-rō'tēz). [L., fr. Gr. ἔρως love, Ἔρως (personified) Eros, fr. ἐράσθαι to love.] 1. Gr. Myth. The god of love; Love; — by Hesiod represented as the first of the gods, by later writers as the son of Aphrodite, equivalent to the Latin god Cupid. In Orphism, Eros was one of the principal gods, born from the cosmic egg, produced by Night (cf. PROTOGONOS).

> Eros is but a specialized form of the Ker; the Erotes are Keres of life, and like the Keres take the form of winged Eidola. J. E. Harrison.
> Eros . . . as the child and companion of Aphrodite . . figures only in the later literature and occasional later cult. The only ancient centers of Eros worship were Thespiæ and Parium, where he was regarded probably not merely as the personification of human love, but as a physical and elemental force, a divinity of fertility. L. R. Farnell.

2. Astron. The 433d asteroid, discovered August 13, 1898, by the German astronomer Doctor G. Witt at Berlin. Eros at times comes nearer to the earth than any heavenly body except the moon, and is therefore well situated for measures of its own parallax, and so for determinations of the solar parallax. Its next nearest approach will be in 1931.

e-rose' (ē-rōs'), a. [L. erosus, p. p. See ERODE.] 1. Irregular or uneven as if eaten or worn away.

5. Law. a A mistake in the proceedings of a court of record in matters of law or of fact. See MISTAKE. b The procedure or proceedings for reversal of a judgment by writ of error. See WRIT OF ERROR.

6. Math. The difference between an observed or calculated value, generally of a physical quantity, and the true value; — called also the true error. Since the true value, or quæsitum, is in general unknown and unknowable, the error must be reckoned on some hypothesis, as in physics that the sum of the squared residual errors should be a minimum. The accidental error is that part of the error of observation that may be eliminated (as near as one will) from the mean by increasing sufficiently the number of similar observations; the constant error is the part not so eliminable, and may be theoretical, instrumental, or personal. The mean error is the square root of the mean of the squared errors (of a given class of observations). The probable error is a value that any given error will as likely fall under as exceed; it is used both of the arithmetical mean and of the general mean (i. e, the mean when the observations are unequally weighted). Residual errors are the observed values less their arithmetical mean. The law of error is that the square of any (accidental) error varies as the logarithm of its frequency. See PROBABILITY.

7. Baseball. A fault of a player of the side in the field, which prolongs the time at bat of the batsman or allows a base runner to advance one or more bases when perfect play would have insured his being put out. Passed balls and wild pitches are not scored as errors.

8. A wandering; an irregular course. Rare Latinism.

9. Passionate anger or vexation. Obs.

Syn. — ERROR, MISTAKE, BLUNDER. An ERROR is a departure or deviation from that which is right or correct; as, a typographical error, an error of judgment; "Those who, with sincerity and generosity, fight and fall in an evil cause, posterity can only compassionate as victims of a generous but fatal error" (Scott). MISTAKE implies misconception, misunderstanding, or inadvertence; it expresses less severe judgment than error; as, "There is a medium between truth and falsehood; and (I believe) the word mistake expresses it exactly. I will therefore say that you were mistaken" (Cowper). BLUNDER is harsher than mistake or error; it commonly implies ignorance or stupidity, sometimes blameworthiness or culpability; as, "We usually call our blunders mistakes, and our friends style our mistakes blunders" (H. B. Wheatley); "A trifling theft was committed, which, by a blunder of his own . . . was magnified to an affair of the last importance" (Cowper); "I have detected [in Bacon] such blunders as a schoolboy might detect rather than commit" (Byron); cf. "It is worse than a crime, it is a blunder" (trans. from Talleyrand). See FAULT, BLEMISH.

error of a clock, Astron., the difference ($t - T$) between clock time (t) and true time (T); thus, it a clock is five seconds fast its error is +5 seconds; if five seconds slow, its error is −5 seconds. See correction of a clock, under CORRECTION.

— e. of closure, Surv., the ratio of the distance by which a survey fails to close to the perimeter of the tract surveyed. See CLOSE, v. i., 5. — error of collimation, deviation of the line of collimation of an astronomical or geodetical instrument from its proper position with respect to the axis of motion. — e. of the mean square. = MEAN-SQUARE ERROR.

er'ror-ist (ĕr'ĕr-ĭst), n. One who encourages and propagates error; one who holds to error.

See RED, FELL hide.] 1. Med. St. Anthony's fire, an acute febrile disease accompanied with a diffused inflammation of the skin and mucous membranes. It is contagious, and often occurs epidemically. It is caused by Streptococcus pyogenes.

2. Veter. A deadly bacillar disease of mature swine, characterized by fever, red discoloration of the skin of the abdomen, injection of the mucous membranes, loss of appetite, enlargement of the spleen, and petechial hemorrhages.

er'y-si-pel'a-toid (-sĭ-pĕl'ā-toid), a. [Gr. ἐρυσιπελας erysipelas + -oid.] Resembling erysipelas er'y-si-pel'a-tous (-tŭs), a. [Cf. F. érysipélateux.] Resembling erysipelas, or partaking of its nature.

er'y-than'the-ma (ĕr'ĭ-thăn'thē-mă), n. [NL.; erythema + exanthema.] Med. A skin disease, or one of a class of skin diseases, marked by efflorescence and resembling erythema in origin, but having a different development.

Er'y-the'a (-thē'ă), n. [NL.; L. Erythia, Gr. Ἐρυθεια, one of the Hesperides.] Bot. A genus of fan palms containing two species, E. armata and E. edulis, natives of southern California. They are slender trees with smooth trunks, spiny or unarmed petioles, and large orbicular leaves, the lobes of which bear white filaments. They are commonly cultivated. Also [l. c.], a palm of this genus.

er'y-the'ma (-thē'mă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐρύθημα, fr. ἐρυθαινειν to redden, fr. ἐρυθρός red.] Med. Abnormal redness of the skin due to capillary congestion, as in inflammation.

er'y-the-mat'ic (-thē-măt'ĭk), a. Med. Marked by, or causing, abnormal redness of the skin; relating to erythema.

Er'y-thræ'a (-thrē'ă), n. [NL. See ERYTHREAN.] Bot. A genus of gentianaceous annual herbs of Europe and western North America. They have showy pink or red flowers with a slender tube and spreading 5-lobed limb; the style is often declined or bent. E. centaurium is the bitter centaury. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Er'y-thræ'an (-thrē'ăn), a. [L. Erythraeus, Gr. Ἐρυθραιος, fr. Ἐρυθραί.] Of or pertaining to Erythræ, an ancient Ionian city of Asia Minor and a dwelling place of a sibyl, Herophile, regarded usually as identical with the Cumæan sibyl. — n. The Erythræan sibyl.

er'y-thre'an, er'y-thræ'an (-thrē'ăn), a. [L. erythraeus, Gr. ἐρυθραιος, fr. ἐρυθρός red.] Red in color; also, of or designating the Red Sea. "The erythrean main." Milton.

e-ryth'ric (ĕ-rĭth'rĭk; ĕr-ĭth'-), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating an acid, the same as ERYTHRIN a.

e-ryth'rin (-rĭn), n. [Gr. ἐρυθρός red.] Chem. a A colorless crystalline substance, $C_{20}H_{22}O_{10}$, extracted from certain lichens, as Roccella, and yielding certain red compounds. b A methyl derivative of eosin, obtained as a green powder and used to dye silk a fluorescent red.

Er'y-thri'na (ĕr'ĭ-thrī'nă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐρυθρός red.] Bot. A genus of fabaceous shrubs or trees with trifoliolate leaves and mostly coral-red flowers, borne in terminal racemes. They are natives of the tropics. In cultivation they are known as coral trees, and are often planted for hedges and for shade in coffee culture. E. arborea, a low shrub, is the only species of the United States. See KAFIR BOOM, CORAL TREE. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Er'y-thrin'i-dæ (ĕr'ĭ-thrĭn'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. A family of pikelike carnivorous South American river fishes, allied to, and often included in, the family Characinidæ.

e-ryth'rism (ĕ-rĭth'rĭz'm; ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [Gr. ἐρυθρός red.] A condition of excessive redness, esp. in the plumage of birds, or hair of mammals, independently of age, sex, or season. — er'y-thris'mal (ĕr'ĭ-thrĭz'măl), a.

e-ryth'rite (-rīt), n. [Gr. ἐρυθρός red.] 1. Chem. A colorless crystalline substance, $C_4H_6(OH)_4$, of a sweet, cooling taste, extracted from certain lichens and algæ, and obtained by the decomposition of erythrin. It is a tetrabasic alcohol, corresponding to glycol and glycerin.

2. Min. A hydrous arsenate of cobalt, $Co_3(AsO_4)_2{\cdot}8H_2O$, occurring in monoclinic crystals and also in globular and reniform masses and in earthy form. It is usually rose-red to crimson in color. H., 1.5–2.5. Sp. gr., 2.91–2.95.

er'y-thrit'ic (ĕr'ĭ-thrĭt'ĭk), n. 1. Chem. & Min. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing, erythrite.

2. Zoöl. Pertaining to, or characterized by, erythrism.

e-ryth'ro- (ĕ-rĭth'rō-; ĕr-ĭth'rō-), erythr-. A combining form from Greek ἐρυθρός, red.

e-ryth'ro-blast (-blăst), n. [erythro- + -blast.] Anat. & Med. A nucleated cell or corpuscle of the type from which red blood corpuscles are developed. In the adult they occur normally especially in the red marrow of bones, but in certain diseases, as forms of anæmia, they occur free in the blood. Two varieties are distinguished: normoblasts, of normal size with a small dark nucleus, and megaloblasts, larger, with a lightly staining nucleus. The latter are commonly numerous in the blood in pernicious anæmia.

e-ryth'ro-dex'trin (-dĕks'trĭn), n. [erythro- + dextrin.] Chem. A variety of dextrin which gives a violet or red color with iodine. It is believed by some to be a mixture of achroodextrin and maltodextrin. See DEXTRIN.

e-ryth'ro-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. [erythro- + -genic.] Physiol. Producing a sensation of red; as, erythrogenic radiations.

er'y-throid (ĕr'ĭ-throid), a. [erythro- + -oid: cf. Gr. ἐρυθροειδής.] Of a red color; reddish.

e-ryth'ro-mē-lal'gi-a (ĕ-rĭth'rō-mē-lăl'jĭ-ă, ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [NL.; erythro- + melalgia.] Med. A neurosis of the feet or hands marked by redness of the skin and burning pain.

Er'y-thro'ni-um (ĕr'ĭ-thrō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐρυθρόνιον a plant of the satyrium kind, fr. ἐρυθρός red.] 1. Bot. A small genus of liliaceous herbs called adder's-tongue and dogtooth violet. All but one of the species are North American. They have a deep-seated corm from which are sent up in early spring two mottled leaves and one or several nodding pink, purple, white, or yellow flowers. E. dens-canis of Europe, and many American species, are esteemed in cultivation. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

er'y-thro'ni-um, n. [NL.; Gr. ἐρυθρός red + -ium.] Chem. Vanadium; — so named by Del Rio, who discovered the metal in 1801, but afterward considered it to be impure chromium. It was rediscovered by Sefström, who gave it its accepted name.

e-ryth'ro-phle'ine (ĕ-rĭth'rō-flē'ĭn; ĕr-ĭth'-; -ēn, 184), n. Also -in. [erythro- + Gr. φλοιός bark.] Chem. A white, crystalline, and very poisonous alkaloid, extracted from sassy bark (Erythrophlæum guineënse). It has been found in an arrow poison of the Pygmies of Central Africa.

e-ryth'ro-phyll (ĕ-rĭth'rō-fĭl; ĕr-ĭth'-), e-ryth'ro-phyl'lin (-fĭl'ĭn), n. [erythro- + -phyll.] Bot. A red coloring matter found in the cell sap of plants, giving color to leaves in autumn.

er'y-throp'si-a (ĕr'ĭ-thrŏp'sĭ-ă), n. [NL.; erythro- + -opsia.] Med. A condition of vision in which objects look red, — often occurring after removal of the crystalline lens.

e-ryth'ro-scope (ĕ-rĭth'rō-skōp; ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [erythro- + -scope.] Physics. A simple device, consisting of overlapping yellow and blue glasses, through which green foliage appears red. Greens not due to chlorophyll, and consequently reflecting but little red light, do not so change their appearance when viewed through the erythroscope.

er'y-throse (ĕr'ĭ-thrōs), n. [erythro- + -ose.] Chem. A sugar, $C_4H_8O_4$, of the tetrose group, formed by the oxidation of erythrite.

e-ryth'ro-sin (ĕ-rĭth'rō-sĭn; ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [Gr. ἐρυθρός red.] Chem. a A red substance formed by the oxidation of tyrosine. b A red dyestuff obtained from fluorescein by the action of iodine.

Er'y-throx'y-lum (ĕr'ĭ-thrŏk'sĭ-lŭm), n. [NL.; erythro- + Gr. ξύλον wood; — so named from the red wood of some species.] Bot. A large genus of chiefly South American shrubs and small trees, typifying the family Erythroxylaceæ, having small white or greenish pentamerous flowers, monadelphous stamens, and drupaceous fruit. E. coca, of Peru, yields the drug coca, some other species furnish dyewoods and cabinet woods.

e-ryth'ro-zyme (ĕ-rĭth'rō-zīm; ĕr-ĭth'-; -zĭm), n. Also -zym. [erythro- + Gr. ζύμη leaven.] Chem. An enzyme extracted from madder root, capable of decomposing ruberythric acid with the formation of alizarin.

es'ca-lade' (ĕs'kă-lād'), n. [F., Sp. escalada (cf. It. scalata), fr. Sp. escalar to scale, LL scalare, fr. L. scala ladder. See SCALE, v. t.] A mounting by ladders; esp., an attack on a fortified place, in which ladders are used to pass a ditch or mount a rampart.

es'ca-lade', v. t.; -LAD'ED (-lād'ĕd); -LAD'ING (-lād'ĭng). To mount and pass or enter by means of ladders; to scale; as, to escalade a wall. — es'ca-lad'er (-lād'ẽr), n.

es'ca-la'tor (ĕs'kă-lā'tẽr), n. [NL. Cf. ESCALADE.] A stairway or incline arranged like an endless belt so that the steps or treads ascend or descend continuously, and one stepping upon it is carried up or down; — a trade term.

Es'cal-lo'ni-a (ĕs'kă-lō'nĭ-ă), n. [NL., after Escallon, a Spanish traveler said to have found plants of the genus.] Bot. A large genus of South American shrubs or small trees, type of the family Escalloniaceæ, having leathery leaves and showy white or red flowers in clusters or racemes. Many of the species are cultivated.

Es'cal-lo'ni-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL] Bot. A family of trees and shrubs (order Saxifragales) consisting of about 21 genera and 90 species, natives of warm regions. They have simple alternate leaves, stamens as many as the petals, a superior or inferior ovary, and numerous ovules. Escallonia, the type, includes more than half the species. Itea is the only genus represented in the United States. — es'cal-lo'ni-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

es-cal'op, es-cal'lop (ĕs-kŏl'ŭp; ĕs-kăl'-; 277), n. [OF. escalope shell, F. escalope a sort of cut of meat. See SCALLOP.] The scallop, its shell, or an indenture or figure resembling that of the shell. See SCALLOP.

Escaloped, Her.

es-cal'oped, es-cal'loped (-ŭpt), a. Scalloped; specif., Her., covered with a pattern of scallops, as if with scales.

es'ca-pade' (ĕs'kă-pād'), n. [F., fr. Sp. escapada escape, fr. escapar to escape; or F, fr. It. scappata escape, escapade, fr. scappare to escape. See ESCAPE.]

1 Act of escaping from confinement or breaking from control, a runaway.

2. A prankish adventure, a breaking loose from rules of propriety or good sense, a freak; prank.

es-cape' (ĕs-kāp'), n. [F. escape, L. scapus the shaft of a column. Cf. SCAPE, n., in this sense.] Arch. An apophyge.

es-cape' (ĕs-kāp'), v. t., ES-CAPED' (-kāpt'), ES-CAP'ING (-kāp'ĭng). [ME. escapen, OF. escaper, dial. form of eschaper, F. échapper, fr. LL. ex cappa out of one's cape or cloak; hence, to slip out of one's cape and escape. See 1st CAPE; cf. SCAPE, v.] 1. To get away, as by flight or other conscious effort; to break away, get free, or get clear, from or out of detention, danger, discomfort, or the like; as, to escape from prison; to escape from a pestilence.

To escape out of these meshes. Thackeray

2. To issue from confinement or inclosure of any sort, as, gas escapes from the mains.

3 To avoid or elude a threatened ill; to miss imminent pain, punishment, or misfortune; to pass safely through peril; as, the quarry escaped.

Such heretics . . . would have been thought fortunate, if they escaped with life. Macaulay.

4. To be or pass unnoted. Rare.

es-cape', v. i. 1. To break away from; to get free from. Obs. or R. "Sailors that escaped the wreck." Shak.

2. To issue from, or be uttered by (one), involuntarily; as, an angry ejaculation escaped him.

3. To get, or be, out of the way of (a person or thing one wishes to avoid); to miss or to succeed in averting (pain, punishment, or misfortune); to avoid; elude; evade; as, to escape the consequences of one's folly; to escape destruction; to escape suspicion, my foe shall not escape me.

4. To fail of (notice) or to fail of being noticed or recalled by (a person); as, the jewels escaped the burglars' eyes; the significance of the act escaped me.

They escaped the search of the enemy. Ludlow.

es-cape', n. [Cf. OF. eschape, F. échappe.] 1. Act of escaping, or state of having escaped; evasion of harm; avoidance of notice; deliverance from injury or any evil; as, an escape in battle; a narrow escape; also, the means of escape; as, a fire escape.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm Ps. lv. 8.

2. Law. The unlawful departure of a prisoner from the limits of his custody. Escape is often specifically used of a departure from custody without prison breach, being called negligent when without the custodian's consent and e-ryth'ro-car'pous, a. [erythro- + -carpous.] Bot. Red-fruited; — esp. of apothecia of lichens.

e-ryth'ro-chro'ism (ĕ-rĭth'rō-krō'ĭz'm; ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [erythro- + Gr χρόα color.] Erythrism. — e-ryth'ro-chro'ic, a.

e-ryth'ro-cy-tom'e-ter (-sĭ-tŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [erythrocyte + -meter.] An instrument for counting red blood corpuscles.

e-ryth'ro-cy-tor-rhex'is (-sĭ'tō-rĕk'sĭs), n. [NL.; erythrocyte + Gr. ῥῆξις a breaking.] Rupture of an erythrocyte.

e-ryth'ro-cy-tos'chi-sis (-sĭ'tŏs'kĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; erythrocyte + Gr. σχίσις a cleaving.] Fission of an erythrocyte.

e-ryth'ro-gen (ĕ-rĭth'rō-jĕn; ĕr-ĭth'-), n. [erythro- + -gen.] Chem. Obs. or R. A Carbon disulphide. b A substance reddened by acids, which is supposed to be contained in flowers. c A crystalline substance said to occur in diseased bile.

e-ryth'ro-glu'cin (-glōō'sĭn), n. [erythro- + Gr. γλυκύς sweet.] Chem. Erythrite.

e-ryth'ro-gran'u-lose (-grăn'ū-lōs), n. [erythro- + granulose.] Chem. A substance present in starch granules, colored red by iodine. Cf. GRANULOSE.

er'y-throl (ĕr'ĭ-thrōl; -thrŏl), n. [erythro- + 2d -ol.] Chem. = ERYTHRITE, 1.

e-ryth'ro-le'ic (ĕ-rĭth'rō-lē'ĭk), a. [erythro- + L. oleum oil.] Chem. Red and oily; — applied to a purple semifluid acid said to be from archil.

er'y-thro'le-in (ĕr'ĭ-thrō'lē-ĭn), n. [See ERYTHROLEIC.] Chem. A red substance got from litmus.

e-ryth'ro-lit'min, n. [erythro- + litmus.] Chem. Erythrolein.

er'y-throl'y-sis (ĕr'ĭ-thrŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.] = ERYTHROCYTOLYSIS.

er'y-throph'i-lous (-thrŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. [erythro- + -philous.] Biol. Having especial affinity for red coloring matter. [ROPHYLLvoluntary when with it When the prisoner gets out of prison and unlawfully regains his liberty, it is an actual escape; when he obtains more liberty than the law allows, it is a constructive escape. In case of an imprisoned debtor, an escape consented to by the creditor discharges the debt. Custody implies physical force sufficient to restrain the prisoner from going at large; that when that physical force is removed, it is in the eye of the law an escape. No moral obligation can be received as a substitute for it. 10 N. C. 216.

allows a tooth to escape from a pallet at regular intervals. The earliest form of escapement was the crown, crown-wheel, or verge escapement, called also vertical escapement because in the plan of a watch the crown wheel is in a vertical position. It was superseded by the common anchor escapement (used at present in common clocks), in which an anchor-shaped piece carries the pallets. Both the above are called recoil escapements, from the recoil of the escape wheel at each vibration; dead, or deadbeat, escapements, on the other hand, are those in which the escape-wheel tooth is so shaped that it falls dead on the pallet without recoil. Of the latter class the Graham escapement (grā'dăm) is the common form. The pinwheel escapement is also classed as a deadbeat escapement, though it is usually half-dead, that is, having a very slight recoil. A remontoir escapement is one in which the escape wheel is driven by an independent spring or weight wound up at intervals by the clock train. A gravity escapement is one in which periodical impulses are given to the pendulum by weights, in the form of pendant pallets or legs, which are lifted by the clock train and fall so as to strike the side of the pendulum. This escapement is used in turret clocks and occasionally in astronomical and other clocks. A single-beat escapement is one in which the escape wheel moves only at every alternate vibration of the balance or pendulum. The best-known varieties are: a The duplex escapement, having two sets of teeth, one to communicate the impulses, and the other to lock the wheel by pressing on a notched roller; it has not proved to be reliable. b The chronometer escapement, the most perfect and satisfactory of all the escapements. Its escape wheel is locked on a stone carried in a detent; the impulses are given to a pallet on the balance staff. It is not adapted to rough usage. The drum escapement, so called from its use in certain drum-shaped clocks, is also single-beat. The lever escapement operates by means of two levers, one of which carries the pallets, while the other, a roller, is attached to the balance staff. Addition of a second and smaller roller produces the variety known as the double-roller escapement. The lever escapement is certain in action, and is therefore much used in pocket watches as a substitute for the chronometer escapement. When the lever escapement has its banking pins made yielding, so as to withstand sudden shocks, it is called a resilient escapement; when the ordinary impulse pin is replaced by two small pins, it is called a two-pin escapement. Both the chronometer and lever escapements are detached escapements, that is, ones in which the balance or pendulum is free or detached from the train during the greater part of its vibration. The cylinder escapement, having an open-sided hollow cylinder on the balance arbor to control the escape wheel, is used for watches not of the highest grade. It has been called the horizontal escapement to distinguish it from the crown-wheel escapement, but all present-day watch escapements are horizontal. The pin-pallet escapement, used chiefly in French clocks, is an escapement somewhat like the Graham, and having semicircular stones for pallets. The electric escapement is a device for arresting the escape wheel periodically by electric impulses. Three-legged, four-legged, escapements, etc., are named from the number of their long escape teeth.

escape pipe. Mach. A pipe for carrying away steam, etc., from an escape valve.

escape valve. Mach. A valve, esp. one fitted to a steam-engine boiler or cylinder, to provide for the escape of steam, water, or other fluid under excessive pressure.

es-cheat' (ĕs-chēt'), n. [ME. eschete, escheyte, an escheat, fr. OF. escheeite, fr. escheeir (F. échoir) to fall to, fall to the lot of; es- (L. ex) + cheeir, F. choir, to fall, fr. L. cadere. See CHANCE, cf. CHEAT.] Law. 1 In the English feudal law, the falling back or reversion of lands to the lord of the fee upon the failure of heirs capable of inheriting under the original grant. This failure of heirs may result from the actual death of the tenant leaving no competent heirs (propter defectum sanguinis), or (formerly) from his legal death and the extinction of his blood by attainder (propter delictum tenentis). (See ATTAINDER, I, CORRUPTION OF BLOOD.) In mediæval French law, land was said to descend to lineal heirs and escheat to collateral heirs: and originally in English law escheat was used interchangeably with reversion for the falling back of lands to the lord upon failure of heirs to a tenant in fee simple, or failure of heirs of his body to a tenant in tail; but later, after subinfeudation was prohibited and the nature of the estate tail fixed (in the time of Edward I.), escheat was applied only in case of the tenant in fee simple, and reversion in case of the tenant in tail. Escheat consequent upon attainder of blood is distinguished from forfeiture, which also was formerly consequent upon treason or felony This escheat was abolished in England by the Felony Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 23) of 1870.

2. Hence, the lapsing or reverting of land to the crown, or to the state in the United States, as original and ultimate proprietor, by reason of a failure of persons legally entitled to hold the same. See FEE, INQUEST OF OFFICE.

3. A writ, now abolished, to recover escheats from the person in possession.

4. In Scotland, sometimes, any confiscation or forfeiture, called simple escheat when absolute, and liferent escheat when only of the profit accruing during the person's life.

es′ker (ĕs′kĕr), n. [Ir. eascra.] Also eskar. Geol. A narrow ridge of gravelly and sandy drift, deposited by a stream in association with glacier ice. In some cases eskers are several or even many miles long, esp. in Ireland and Maine. Similar ridges in Sweden are called osar (sing. os), and in Scotland kames or kams. Recent writers generally reserve the term kame for a hillock, or short ridge, supposed to have been formed by a subglacial stream at the point where it emerges, and call the long winding ridges, supposed to mark beds of subglacial streams, eskers or osar. Eskers were formerly called serpentine kames.

Es/ki-mau′an (ĕs/kĭ-mō′ăn; -mô′ăn), a. Of or pertaining to the Eskimos, or designating the linguistic stock which they form. See AGGLUTINATIVE LANGUAGES.

Es/ki-mo (ĕs′kĭ-mō), n.; pl. -MOS (-mōz). [Originally applied by the Algonquins to the Northern Indians, and meaning eaters of raw flesh.] A member of a race whose main habitat is the Arctic coasts of America and who are characterized by short to medium stature, yellow complexion, straight eyes, and prominent cheek bones, and in the pure Eskimo of Greenland by extreme dolichocephaly. They are hunters and fishers, living in small family or tribal groups without chiefs, and display artistic skill in the carving of bone and ivory. They form a single linguistic stock (30,000 to 35,000 individuals), of which the largest groups are found in Greenland and Alaska. A small group is found on the Asiatic coast. Ethnologists are not agreed as to their origin and racial affinities. Cf. ALEUT, INNUIT.

The Eskimos have preserved their language almost unchanged because their life is in the main still that of the stone-age inhabitants of Europe, of whom they seem to be the last surviving representatives. H Sweet.

Eskimo dog, one of a breed of large and powerful dogs having an outer coat of long hair, usually of a yellowish or grayish color, and an under coat of soft wool, used by the Eskimos to draw sledges. It closely resembles the gray wolf, with which it is often crossed.

Skr. vī to go, drive) + φαγεῖν to eat.] Anat. & Zoöl. The gullet; the tube that leads from the pharynx to the stomach. In man it is about nine inches long, and passes down the neck between the trachea and the spinal column. Passing behind the left bronchus, it pierces the diaphragm slightly to the left of the middle line and joins the cardiac end of the stomach. It is composed of three coats, an outer muscular coat, containing both longitudinal and circular fibers; an areolar coat; and an inner mucous coat, lined with a stratified pavement epithelium on the surface of which the esophageal glands open. The esophagus in other vertebrates is subject to various modifications, chiefly through the development of dilatations for the temporary retention of food, as the crop of a bird, or by being enormously distensible, as in animals that swallow their food entire.

ess (ĕs), n.; pl. ESSES (ĕs'ĕz; -ĭz). The name of the letter S; also, something resembling the letter in shape.

-ess (-ĕs). [OF. -esse, LL. -issa, Gr -ισσα.] A suffix used to form feminine nouns; as, actr*ess*, patron*ess*, songstr*ess*. -ess is sometimes added to titles of office to denote the officer's wife; as, archdeacon*ess*.

es'say (ĕs'ā; formerly often ĕ-sā'), n. [F. essai, fr. L. exagium a weighing, weight, balance; ex out + agere to drive, do; cf. examen, exagmen, a means of weighing, a weighing, the tongue of a balance, exigere to drive out, examine, weigh. See AGENT; cf. EXACT, EXAMINE, ASSAY.] 1. An effort made, or exertion of body or mind, for the performance of anything; a trial; attempt; as, to make an essay to benefit a friend. "The essay at organization." M. Arnold

2. A literary composition, analytical or interpretative in nature, dealing with its subject from a more or less limited or personal standpoint and permitting a considerable freedom of style and method. Though commonly essays are brief, suitable for reading at one sitting, the term is also applied to systematic works treating their subjects under a series of captions, as Locke's "Essay Concerning Human Understanding." Occasionally poetic works bear the title, as Pope's "Essay on Man." In general, an essay is distinguished from a treatise or dissertation in being less systematic and formal, from a thesis in not being restricted to formal argument, from a history or biography in treating its subject in a single aspect rather than its whole scope

3. A trial; test; tentative attempt; = ASSAY, n., 1. Obs.

4. A trial specimen; a sample, draft, specimen copy, design, or the like; a pattern, as of a stamp or coin.

Syn. — Attempt, trial, endeavor, effort; tract, treatise, dissertation, disquisition.

2. A writer of essays.

es'say-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), es'say-is'ti-cal (-ĭs'tĭ-kăl), a.

es'sence (ĕs'ĕns), n. [F. essence, L. essentia, formed as if fr. a p. pr. of esse to be. See IS; cf. ENTITY.] 1. That by which a thing is what it is. The Scholastics used essentia (Gr. οὐσία) first, as equivalent to substance (substantia), or that by which a thing exists; and, second, as denoting the essential nature of a thing in definition or conception; as, the essence of the mind is to think. In neither case is essence identified with existence In English the first meaning taken over was that of substance or prime constituent. Later essence came to mean manner of existence; and then, existence, or specific existence. The second Scholastic meaning (i. e., conceptual essence) apparently always influenced the use of the word, and eventually came into use through philosophical writings. The two meanings have never been kept wholly distinct. Cf. EXISTENCE, SUBSTANCE.

> The Scholastic doctrine of essences long survived the theory on which it rested, that of the existence of real entities corresponding to general terms. J. S. Mill.

2. Substance; primarily, a necessary constituent, or elemental substance; an element; secondarily, metaphysical substance; substance as distinguished from and as supporting attributes.

> And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

3. Existence. a Existence as a characteristic; ground of existence.

> She is my essence, and I leave to be,
> If I be not by her fair influence > Foster'd, illumined, cherish'd, kept alive. Shak.

b An existence; an existent being or entity.

> Her honor is an essence that's not seen. Shak.

> Indulging in fanciful speculations on spiritual essences, until . . . he had an ideal world of his own around him. Irving.

4. Fundamental or intrinsic being; prime character; ultimate or intrinsic nature. Specif.: a Conceptual essence; the constituent elementary notions united in the definition of a thing; — sometimes called the nominal essence.

> The laws are at present, both in form and essence, the greatest curse that society labors under. Landor.
> The essence of Addison's humor is irony. Courthope.

b The intrinsic nature of a real entity; a thing in itself; that in the objective world which makes a thing what it is; — sometimes called the real essence. The real essence should be distinguished from substance, for, while it may be conceived as a substance, it is not so necessarily.

> Thus the cosmos turns out to be, in part the necessary nature, in part the free will, of God; its essences and properties being determined by the former; the synchronisms of its phenomena by the latter.
> The forms of government do not affect the essence of government. Woodrow Wilson.

5. Importance; essentiality. Obs.

6. A substance considered to possess in high degree the predominant qualities or virtues of a plant, drug, or the like, from which it is extracted by distillation, infusion, or other process, as, essence of turpentine; specif., an alcoholic solution of an essential oil; as, essence of mint

> The . . . word essence . . . scarcely underwent a more complete transformation when from being the abstract of the verb "to be," it came to denote something sufficiently concrete to be inclosed in a glass bottle. J. S. Mill.

7. Perfume; odor; scent, or the volatile matter constituting perfume; also, a volatile spirit, as spirit of petroleum.

> Nor let the imprisoned essences exhale. Pope.

8. A variety of wine, as of Tokay, made from the juice which flows with little or no pressure from the ripest grapes.

9. Metaph. As an equivalent of Aristotle's category οὐσία (which is more commonly translated by the word substance), a term that more or less technically includes the permanent phases of being in contrast with what reflection and experience find to be variable and partial and hence phenomenal. The phrase true being is sometimes preferred to express this meaning. Aristotle (Metaph.) considers the thought at great length and identifies it with form-giving cause (εἶδος), thus connecting it with Plato's Ideas.

W. T. Harris.

es'sence (ĕs'ĕns), v. t.; ES'SENCED (-ĕnst); ES'SENC-ING (-ĕn-sĭng). To perfume, to scent. "Essenced fops." Addison.

Es-sene' (ĕ-sēn'), n. [Gr 'Εσσηνοί, pl, of Heb. or Aramaic origin] One of a sort of brotherhood or monastic order among the Jews of Palestine from the 2d century B. C. to the 2d century A. D. It was organized on a rigid communistic basis and practiced the strictest asceticism, abstaining from marriage and observing the Sabbath and rites of purification with extreme scrupulousness. — Es-se'ni-an (ĕ-sē'nĭ-ăn), Es-sen'ic (-sĕn'ĭk), Es-sen'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — Es'se-nism (ĕs'ē-nĭz'm; ĕ-sēn'ĭz'm), n. — Es'se-nize (ĕs'ē-nīz; ĕ-sēn'ĭz), v. i.

es-sen'tial (ĕ-sĕn'shăl), a. [Cf. F. essentiel. See ESSENCE.] 1. Having the character of an essence; specif.: a Having or realizing the conceptual essence of its kind; being what it is in the most perfect degree; as, essential bliss is known only to angels; essential poetry is perfect poetry b Having existence or substance; existent; substantial.

> Is it true, then, that thou art but a name,
> And no essential thing? J. Webster.

2. Of or pertaining to essence, or the essence of something; forming, belonging to, or relating to, the inner or constituent character of anything; as, an essential right; the catastrophe is an essential part of tragedy.

3. Important in the highest degree; indispensable to the attainment of an object; indispensably necessary.

> Judgment 's more essential to a general
> Than courage. Denham.
> How to live? — that is the essential question for us. H. Spencer.

4. Containing the essence or that portion of a plant or substance which is marked by its characteristic odor or virtue; having the nature of an essence (see ESSENCE, n., 6); as, an essential odor. See ESSENTIAL OIL, below.

5. Music. Necessary to the tonality; as, essential notes or tones, those which determine a chord, in distinction from ornamental or passing tones; essential sharps or flats; essential harmony.

4. Pomp; display; state. Archaic.

5. A seat of dignity, or that which contains it, as a canopy, dais, etc. Obs.

6. A social or political class or rank; a group of people distinguished from others in the same community or nation by their duties or privileges; specif., one of the great classes or orders (called estates of the realm) of a state who are vested with distinct political powers and whose concurrence is necessary to legislation. Generally in feudal Europe there were three estates, the clergy, nobles, and commons (often called simply the three estates), the main exceptions being Sweden (where the four estates were the nobles, the clergy, the burghers, and the peasants) and Aragon, where they were the nobility, the equestrian order, the representatives of the cities and towns, and the clergy. In England the three estates of the realm were originally the clergy, barons, and knights, later (from about the 14th century) the lords spiritual, lords temporal, and the commons. In legal practice the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usually collectively designated under the one name lords; and from the fact that the lords spiritual have no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. In France the third estate (tiers état) was the commons.

7. The state; the general body politic; the commonwealth; hence, the general interest; state affairs. Obs.

8 Law. The degree, quality, nature, and extent of one's interest in, or ownership of, land or other tenements; as, an estate for life, for years, at will. Originally estate was used only of freehold interests, but later became extended to include other interests, such as mortgage rights, leaseholds, and certain rights of creditors, now classed as personal property. The classification of estates is based upon quantity, or duration, and is as follows: estates of freehold, including the fee simple, fee tail, and life estates; and estates not of freehold, or tenancies (see TENANCY), including tenancies for years, and occasionally but not usually tenancies at will, from year to year, and at sufferance, these last not being ordinarily classed as estates.

estate at sufferance, e at will. Law. See TENANCY AT SUFFERANCE, TENANCY AT WILL — e. in expectancy, Law, an estate, either vested or contingent, in which one has a present right or interest, but of which the possession is postponed or limited to take effect at some future time or upon the happening of some future event. — e. in tail. = ESTATE TAIL.

3. To form a numerical or quantitative estimate of; to calculate. Obs.

4 To form or hold an opinion or judgment of; to deem; think; consider; view.

Syn. — Appreciate, value, prize, honor, revere, venerate, reverence. — ESTEEM, RESPECT, REGARD apply commonly to persons or personal qualities. To ESTEEM is to value or prize, esp. for real or intrinsic worth; it commonly implies some warmth of feeling or attachment; as, "I am covetous, if ever man was, of living in the remembrance of absentees whom I highly value and esteem" (Cowper); cf. "Beauty is . . . the object of liking, great qualities of admiration, good ones of esteem" (Fielding). RESPECT implies honor and deference; it is a word of less warmth than esteem; as, "Who is to respect what is gross and sensual?" (Thackeray); "He stood, in the old-fashioned observance of respect, to yield precedence" (Stevenson). REGARD (often somewhat formal or conventional) implies perception or recognition of what is estimable or admirable; as, I regard him highly; cf. "Give him my regards." See REVERENCE, DEFERENCE, ESTIMATE (v. & n.).

es-teem' (ĕs-tēm'), v. i To form an estimate; to have regard to value; to consider; think; — usually with of. Obs.

We ourselves esteem not of that obedience, or love, or gift, which is of force. Milton.

And poor in worth! Shak.

3. High estimation or value; great regard; favorable opinion, founded on supposed worth.

Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem. Shak.

4. Worth; value; standing; rank. Archaic.

Five hundred prisoners of esteem. Shak.

es'ter (ĕs'tẽr), n. [A word invented by L. Gmelin, a German chemist.] Chem. A compound which may be regarded as formed by the replacement of the acid hydrogen of an acid, organic or inorganic, by a hydrocarbon radical; — called also compound ether, ethereal salt. When the radical is not specified in the name, ethyl is often understood; as, acetic ester, or ethyl acetate. Many esters are liquids, often of agreeable odor. The natural fats are glyceryl esters of the fatty acids, oleic, stearic, etc. Esters are analogous in structure to salts, but, unlike salts, are only very slightly ionized in solution, and hence react much more slowly. When hydrolyzed they yield the corresponding acid and an alcohol.

es-ter'i-fy (ĕs-tĕr'ĭ-fī), v. t. & i.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'ĭng) [ester + -fy.] Chem. To convert, or be converted, into an ester. — es-ter'i-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n.

2. To fix the worth, value, size, extent, etc., of, esp. roughly or in a general way; to appraise; as, to estimate the value of land; to estimate the worth of a person.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke

3. To calculate approximately some particulars of, as the price to be charged for work, space to be filled, etc.; as, to estimate a job of printing; to estimate a manuscript.

4. To hold in esteem; to regard. Obs.

Syn.—Regard, rate, appraise, prize.—ESTIMATE, VALUE, APPRECIATE. To ESTIMATE is to place an (indeterminate) value on; to VALUE is to prize or estimate highly; to APPRECIATE is to exercise a nice or delicate perception of worth or value; as, "I most willingly admit, and estimate at a high value, the services [of] the Edinburgh Review" (Coleridge); "His new imaginative culture had taught him to value the 'surprises' of nature itself" (W. Pater); "Appreciate is a good and useful [word]; it signifies more than estimate or value; it implies to 'value justly'" (Landor); "He must have an eye for the 'humanities' which underlie the estranging barriers of social demarcation, and in relation to which the influence of those barriers can alone be rightly appreciated" (T. H. Green). See ESTEEM, ESTIMATE (n.).

es'ti-mate (ĕs'tĭ-māt), v. i. To make an estimate.

es'ti-mate (-măt), n. 1. A valuing or rating, esp. from incomplete data; rough or approximate calculation; as, an estimate of the cost of a building.

2. A statement of the amount for which certain work will be done by one who wishes to do it.

3. A judgment or opinion, usually implying careful consideration or research; as, an estimate of character; a judicial estimate of historical events.

4. Estimation; esteem; repute. Rare.

Syn.—ESTIMATE, ESTIMATION. An ESTIMATE is an approximate judgment of value, magnitude, amount, etc.; ESTIMATION is a feeling of respect or esteem, based on a recognition of value or worth; as, "The fact must be duly marked and provided for, with due estimate of his own susceptibility thereto" (W. Pater); "He [Goldsmith] gradually rose in the estimation of the booksellers for whom he drudged" (Macaulay). See ESTIMATE (v.), ESTEEM.

es'ti-ma'tion (ĕs'tĭ-mā'shŭn), n. [L. aestimatio, fr. aestimare: cf. F. estimation. See ESTEEM, v. t.] 1. Act of estimating; act of judging as to value, extent, quality, etc.

2. Result of estimating; an opinion or judgment of the worth, extent, or quantity of anything, esp. if formed without using precise data; valuation, as, estimations of distance, magnitude, amount, or moral qualities.

If he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him. Lev. XXVII. 8.

3. Favorable opinion; esteem; regard, honor.

I shall have estimation among the multitude. Wisdom VIII. 10.

4. Manner of estimating; point of view; as, in the estimation of the law.

5. Supposition; conjecture. Obs.

I speak not this in estimation. Shak.

es'ti-ma-tive (ĕs'tĭ-mā-tĭv), a. [Cf. F. estimatif.] 1. Inclined, or able, to estimate; serving for, or capable of being used in, estimating.

2. A thrusting sword, esp. as distinguished from the heavy sword used to break through armor.

es-toile' (ĕs-toil'; ĕs-twäl'), n. [OF., star, F. étoile.] Her. A star conventionally represented. According to some it should have six points (as is usual in British heraldry), and Planché says in addition that these points should not be wavy, as most authorities assert, unless the estoile is expressly said to be rayonnant. Woodward asserts that the number of rays when over five (Clark, quoting Guillim, says six) should be specified. When the number of rays exceeds six the rays are wavy, or more usually straight and wavy alternately. The estoile is often confused with the mullet or rowel of a spur. See MULLET.

estoile of four points. = CROSS ESTOILÉ.

es-top' (ĕs-tŏp'), v. i.; ES-TOPPED' (-tŏpt'); ES-TOP'PING. [OF. estoper to stop, plug, F. étouper, LL. stuppare to close with tow, obstruct, fr. L. stuppa tow, oakum, cf. G. στύππη. Cf. STOP.] 1. To plug or fill up; bar; stop. Archaic.

2. Law. To impede or bar by estoppel.

es-top'pel (ĕs-tŏp'ĕl), n. [Cf. OF. estoupail bung. See ESTOP; cf. STOPPLE.] Law. A preclusion or bar to one's alleging or denying a fact because of his own previous action, allegation, or denial by which the contrary has been admitted, implied, or determined. Estoppels are divided into three classes: Estoppel by record, sometimes called estoppel by judgment, which precludes the denial of the truth of anything appearing in the record of a final judgment, so that if the judgment is in rem it is conclusive against the whole world, and if in personam, upon the parties and their privies only. Estoppel by deed, which precludes a party who has entered into an agreement by deed, or instrument under seal, from denying, to the prejudice of the other party, anything stated therein. Estoppel in pais, or estoppel by conduct, which, when a party whose conduct or language has caused another reasonably to believe in the existence of a certain state of things and (having a legal right so to do) to act upon the belief, precludes him from averring or setting up to the prejudice of the latter that a different state of things existed at the time in question. An intent to defraud or deceive is not essential to cause the estoppel. Estoppels by record and by deed are often called common-law, legal, or technical, estoppels, as distinguished from the estoppel in pais, which is often called equitable estoppel, because it arose in courts of equity, though it is now applied by all courts.

Es-tot'i-land (ĕs-tŏt'ĭ-lănd), n. An imaginary region in America, near the Arctic Circle, referred to by Milton as "cold Estotiland," fabled to have been discovered in the 15th century.

es-trange'ment (ĕs-trānj'mĕnt), n. [Cf. OF. estrangement.] Act of estranging, or state of being estranged; alienation, esp. in friendship or affection.

An estrangement from God J. C. Shairp.

es-tray' (ĕs-trā'), v. i.; ES-TRAYED' (-trād'); ES-TRAY'ING. To wander, to stray.

es-tray', n. [See STRAY.] 1. Law. Any valuable animal, not wild, found wandering from its owner; a stray. The English law generally defines an estray as a wandering (domestic) animal whose owner is unknown, and the test of ownership is the only one that can reasonably be applied under certain conditions, as where the cattle of different owners are grazed in common, as on the English manors and in many parts of the United States, the ownership being generally determined by brands or other markings. In other sections, generally those more closely settled, wandering cattle with no one then following or claiming them are held estrays even if their ownership is known. At common law, estrays not duly claimed escheat to the state.

2. Anything that has wandered or gone out of its usual or normal place or habitat.

The involuntary estrays from tropical seas. Science.

es-treat' (ĕs-trēt'), n. [OF. estraite, fr. p. p. of estraire to extract, F. extraire, fr. L. extrahere. See EXTRACT.] Law. a A true copy, duplicate, or extract of an original writing or record, esp. of amercements or penalties set down in the rolls of court to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer. Cowell. b The fines or payments so levied. Obs.

2. To exact or take by way of a levy, fine, etc.

es-trepe' (ĕs-trēp'), v. t. [OF. estreper.] Law. To spoil or commit waste upon. See ESTREPEMENT es-trepe'ment (-mĕnt), n. [OF.] Law. Waste of lands, esp. that committed by a tenant for life, in lands, woods, or houses, to the damage of the reversioner.

es'tu-a-rine (ĕs'tū-ā-rĭn; -rīn), a. Of, pertaining to, or formed in, an estuary.

es'tu-a-ry (ĕs'tū-ā-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [L. aestuarium, fr. aestus the swell of the sea, tide; orig., boiling; cf. Gr. αἴθος fire, αἴθειν to kindle, and E. ETHER.] 1. A place where water boils up; a spring that wells forth. Obs.

2. A passage, as the mouth of a river or lake, where the tide meets the river current; more commonly, a narrow arm of the sea at the lower end of a river; a frith.

Exit to the sea was often by long and wide estuaries. Dana.

e-su'ri-ence (ē-sū'rĭ-ĕns) } n. [See ESURIENT.] State of e-su'ri-en-cy (-ĕn-sĭ) } being esurient, hunger; greed.

e-su'ri-ent (-ĕnt), a. [L. esuriens, p. pr. of esurire, fr. edere to eat.] Inclined to eat; hungry; voracious; greedy.

E'sus (ē'sŭs), He'sus (hē'sŭs), n. A divinity of the ancient Celts mentioned by Lucan along with Teutates and Taranis in the "Pharsalia," and known from an altar found at Notre Dame. The three divinities have been identified by many authorities with the Mars, Mercury, and Jupiter mentioned by Cæsar as the chief gods of the Gauls, but it is possible that they were local deities. Esus is represented as a woodcutter. His name signifies "Master."

-et (-ĕt; -ĭt, 151). [OF. -et, -ete, F. -et, -ette. Cf. -LET.] A noun suffix, occurring in diminutives from the French; as, crotchet, fillet, islet, billet. In English the diminutive force is often lost, esp. when the undiminished form of the word is not represented in English, as, hatchet, pullet, pocket, cf. hache, poule, poche. -et sometimes represents a respelling of -ette fr. F. -elle; as in sextet, octet.

☞ Sometimes used to form decimal multiples, as sixthet = .000001.

2 Supplies issued to troops on the march; hence, Mil., the place where troops on the march halt over night; also, by extension, the distance marched during a day.

3 In Russia, a prison or stockade for the confinement of prisoners in transit.

‖ É'tat' Ma'jor' (ā'tȧ' mȧ'zhôr'), [F, fr. état state + L. major greater.] Mil. The staff of an army, including all officers above the rank of colonel, also all adjutants, inspectors, quartermasters, commissaries, engineers, ordnance officers, paymasters, physicians, signal officers, judge advocates; also, the noncommissioned assistants of the above officers.

et cet'er-a, or et cæt'er-a (ĕt sĕt'ĕr-ȧ). [L et and + cetera other things.] Others of the like kind; and the rest, and so on, and so forth; —used to point out that other things which could be mentioned are to be understood. Sometimes written as one word, usually abbreviated into etc. or &c. (&-c.).

et-cet'er-as, et-cæt'er-as (-ȧs), n. pl. Things referred to by the term et cetera.

etch (ĕch), v. t.; ETCHED (ĕcht); ETCH'ING. [D. etsen, G. ätzen to feed, corrode, etch, MHG. etzen, causative of ezzen to eat, G. essen. See EAT.] 1. To produce, as figures or designs, on metal, glass, or the like, by means of lines or strokes eaten in or corroded by means of some chemical agent, as nitric acid. In the art of etching the plate is first covered with varnish, or some other ground capable of resisting the acid, and this is then scored or scratched with a needle, or similar instrument, so as to form the drawing; the plate is then covered with acid, which corrodes the metal in the lines thus laid bare. Impressions are then taken in ink from this plate.

2. To subject to etching, as a plate of metal.

I was etching a plate at the beginning of 1875. Hamerton.

3. Lithog. To treat (the stone) with dilute nitric or other acid in order to fix the design and render the exposed parts of the stone more repellent to grease.

4. To sketch, to delineate. Rare.

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their system. Locke.

quality other than mere duration; as, the eternal life is a life of celestial bliss.
That they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. 2 Tim. ii. 10.
2. Continued without intermission; perpetual; ceaseless.
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.
3. Valid or existing at all times; immutable.
What are the eternal objects of poetry among all nations, and at all times? M. Arnold.
4. Having no element of time; timeless. Cf. ETERNITY, 4.
5. Abhorrent. "Some eternal villain." Shak.
Syn. — Ceaseless, unceasing, incessant, perpetual, never-ending, uninterrupted, unintermitted, interminable, boundless; immortal, imperishable, enduring. — ETERNAL, EVERLASTING, ENDLESS. ETERNAL, as used of duration, strictly implies absence of either beginning or end; it commonly conveys the implication of inherent quality rather than that of mere continuance; EVERLASTING, though often interchangeable with eternal, more frequently applies to future duration alone, and is less often thought of as implying essential quality; as, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. xxxiii. 27); eternal life, everlasting life, "since Heaven's eternal year is thine" (Dryden); "This is the everlasting Yea, wherein all contradiction is solved" (Carlyle). ENDLESS applies to length as well as duration, and conveys least implication of inherent quality; as, an endless chain, endless succession; "the power of an endless life" (Heb. vii. 16). All three words are used as strong intensives, in the sense of "perpetual, interminable," frequently with the implication of tediousness or monotony; as, "Eternal smiles his emptiness betray" (Pope); "Let me hear their everlasting grunts and whines no more" (Shelley); "an infinite and endless liar" (Shak.). See CONTINUAL, LASTING.
Eternal City, the, Rome; — a common and ancient designation. — e. generation, Theol., the doctrine that the Son is continuously begotten of God the Father in the same manner that light begets luster. Origen opposed this view to the Gnostic doctrine of emanation.

e-ter'nal (ē-tûr'năl), n. 1 [cap.] One of the appellations of God.
Law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.
2. a Eternity. Obs. b pl. Eternal things.

e-ter'nal-ly, adv. Throughout eternity; everlastingly; forever; perpetually; immutably.
That which is morally good or evil at any time or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so. South.

e-ter'ni-ty (ē-tûr'nĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [F. éternité, L. aeternitas, fr. aeternus. See ETERNE.] 1. Character or quality of being eternal; infinite duration; duration without beginning; duration without end.
The high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity. Is. lvii. 15.
2. Condition which begins at death; immortality.
Thou know'st 't is common; all that lives must die, Passing through nature to eternity. Shak.
3. Seeming endlessness; an indefinite or immeasurable expanse of time; an age; sometimes, an age in the indefinite future; as, he faced an eternity of regret.
4. Philos. That which transcends time; that which involves or includes timeless reality; also, absolute timelessness itself.

e-ter'nize (ē-tûr'nīz; formerly often, and still occas., ē'tẽr-nīz), v. t.; E-TER'NIZED (-nīzd); E-TER'NIZ-ING (-nīz-ĭng). [Cf. F. éterniser.] 1. To make eternal, or endless; also, to prolong indefinitely.
This other [gift] served but to eternize woe. Milton.
2. To make forever famous, to immortalize; as, to eternize one's self, a name, exploits.
My verse your virtues rare shall eternize. Spenser.

e-te'sian (ē-tē'zhăn), a. [L. etesiae, pl., periodic winds, Gr. ἐτησίαι, fr. ἔτος year.] [Often cap.] Periodical, annual; — applied to winds in the Mediterranean region, esp. those which blow from the north in the Ægean Sea and the Levant during the summer.

-eth (-ĕth; -ĭth; 151). [AS. -eð, -að; -ð.] The Middle English ending of the present indicative third person singular. Obs., except in archaic or poetical language.

-eth. A suffix of ordinal numbers. See 2d -TH.

eth'al (ĕth'ăl; ē'thăl), n. [ether + alcohol.] Chem. Cetyl alcohol.

eth'ane (ĕth'ān), n. [From ETHER.] Chem. A gaseous hydrocarbon, C_2H_6, forming a constituent of natural and ordinary illuminating gas and burning with a pale flame. It is the second member of the methane series, and its most important derivatives are common alcohol, aldehyde, ether, and acetic acid.

eth'ene (ĕth'ēn; 277), n. Chem. Ethylene. — e-then'ic (ē-thĕn'ĭk), a.

eth'e-nyl (ĕth'ē-nĭl), n. [ethene + -yl.] Chem. A trivalent hydrocarbon radical, $CH_3{\cdot}C$. The isomeric univalent radical of the ethylene series, $CH_2{:}CH$, is called vinyl.

e'ther (ē'thẽr), n. Also æther. [L. aether, Gr. αἰθήρ, akin to αἴθειν to light up, kindle, burn, blaze, Skr. idh, AS. ād funeral pile, OHG. eit.] 1. That one of the elements which, according to Aristotle, forms the material of the heavenly spheres and bodies from the moon to the fixed stars (cf. ELEMENT, 1); hence, the upper regions of space or the rarefied element supposed to fill it; the empyrean; the clear sky; — in this sense often spelt æther to emphasize the classical allusion.
2. Physics. A hypothetical medium supposed to fill all known space, even those portions occupied by fluids and solids. The functions assigned to the ether, such as the transmission of transverse waves with the velocity of light and the production, when under certain strains or subjected to certain motions, of all the phenomena due to electric and magnetic fields of force, indicate properties unlike those of any known form of matter. The difficulty of forming any accurate conception of the nature and structure of the ether is very great, and the prevailing views concerning it are, as yet, speculative.
3. Chem. a A light, volatile, mobile, inflammable liquid, $(C_2H_5)_2O$ (or ethyl oxide), of a characteristic aromatic odor, obtained by the distillation of alcohol with sulphuric acid, and hence called also sulphuric ether. It is a powerful solvent of fats, resins, pyroxylin, etc., but finds its chief use as an anæsthetic. It boils at 34.6° C. (94 3° F.). b Any similar oxide of hydrocarbon radicals; as, amyl ether. An oxide of two different radicals, as methyl ethyl ether, $CH_3OC_2H_5$, is known as a compler, or mixed, ether. c An ester, esp. an ethyl ester; as, valeric ether; — called specif. compound ether, as distinguished from simple ethers, or ethers proper. See ESTER.

e-the're-al (ē-thē'rē-ăl), a. [L. aethereus, -ius, Gr. αἰθέριος. See ETHER.] 1. Of or pertaining to the ether, or the regions beyond the earth or its atmosphere; celestial; as, ethereal space; ethereal regions.
2. Pertaining to the earth's atmosphere. "Ethereal light." Dryden.
3. Formed of ether; hence, exceedingly light or airy; tenuous; spiritlike; characterized by extreme delicacy, as form, manner, thought, etc.
Vast chain of being, which from God began, Natures ethereal, human, angel, man Pope.
4 Chem. Pertaining to, containing, or resembling, ether; as, an ethereal solution.
5. Physics. Of or pertaining to the ether (see ETHER, n., 2). — ethereal medium, Physics. = ETHER, n., 2. — e. oil. a Chem. = ESSENTIAL OIL. b A heavy, yellow, oily liquid consisting essentially of etherin, etherol, and ethyl sulphate. It is the oily residuum left after etherification. Called also heavy oil of wine (distinguished from oil of wine, or œnanthic ester). c Pharm. A mixture of the preceding oil with an equal volume of ether. — e. salt, Chem., an ester. — e. tincture, Pharm., a solution of medicinal substance in ether.

e-the're-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Ethereal state or quality.
Something of that ethereality of thought and manner which belonged to Wordsworth's earlier lyrics. J. C. Shairp.

e-the're-al-ize (ē-thē'rē-ăl-īz), v. t.; E-THE'RE-AL-IZED (-īzd); E-THE'RE-AL-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). To convert into, or saturate with, ether; also, to render ethereal or spiritlike; spiritualize. — e-the're-al-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'shŭn), n.
Etherealized, moreover, by spiritual communications with the other world. Hawthorne.

e-the're-ous (ē-thē'rē-ŭs), a. [See ETHEREAL.] Formed of ether; ethereal.
Thus ethereous mold whereon we stand. Milton.

ether extract. Anal. Chem. The total material, largely fat, extracted by ether in the analysis of foods, feeding stuffs, etc. In statements of analyses ether extract is often used interchangeably with fat.

e-ther'ic (ē-thĕr'ĭk; ē'thẽr-), e-ther'i-cal (ē-thĕr'ĭ-kăl), a. Physics. Ethereal. — etheric telegraphy, wireless telegraphy.

e-ther'i-fi-ca'tion (ē-thĕr'ĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn; ē'thẽr-), n. Chem. Act or process of making ether, specif., of transforming a large quantity of alcohol into ether by the agency of a small amount of sulphuric, or ethyl sulphuric, acid.

e-ther'i-fy (ē-thĕr'ĭ-fī; ē'thẽr-), v. t.; -I-FIED (-fīd); -I-FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [ether + -fy.] Chem. To convert (an alcohol) into an ether, esp. (ordinary alcohol) into ordinary ether.

e'ther-in (ē'thẽr-ĭn), n. Org. Chem. a Ethylene, regarded as a basic radical and assumed to be a constituent of alcohol, ether, and various other compounds. This theory, called the etherin theory, was advanced by Dumas and Boullay in 1828. Obs. exc. Hist. b A white crystalline substance found in heavy oil of wine (the residue left from making ether) and regarded as a polymer of ethylene.

e-the'ri-on (ē-thē'rĭ-ŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. αἰθέριον, neut. of αἰθέριος ethereal. See ETHER.] Chem. An extremely light gas supposed to be contained in the air. The evidence of its existence is very unsatisfactory.

e'ther-ism (ē'thẽr-ĭz'm), n. Med. The condition caused by the administration or excessive use of ether.

e'ther-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn: -ī-zā'shŭn), n. Med. Administration of ether to produce anæsthesia; also, the condition so produced.

e'ther-ize (ē'thẽr-īz), v. t.; E'THER-IZED (-īzd); E'THER-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). [Cf. F. éthériser.] 1. To convert into ether.
2. To render insensible with ether, as by inhalation.

e'ther-o-late (ē'thẽr-ō-lāt), n. [From ETHER.] A preparation containing ether; an ethereal solution.

ether value. Anal. Chem. The difference between the saponification value and the acid value. It is taken as a measure of the true fats (esters of the fatty acids) present.

eth'ic (ĕth'ĭk) } a. [L. ethicus, Gr. ἠθικός, fr. ἦθος cus-eth'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } tom, usage, character, dwelling; akin to ἔθος custom, Goth. sidus, G. sitte, Skr. svadhā, prob. orig., one's own doing; sva self + dhā to set: cf. F. éthique. See so, DO.] 1. Of or relating to moral action, motive, or character; as, ethical emotion; also, treating of moral feelings, duties, or conduct; containing precepts of morality; moral; as, ethic discourses; an ethical system.
The ethical meaning of the miracles. Trench.
2. Relating to ethos, or character.
Syn. — See MORAL.
ethical dative, Gram., a colloquial use of the dative of a pronoun for the person regarded as having an interest in the matter in question; as, Quid mihi Celsus agit? How does my Celsus do? "He plucked me ope his doublet and offered them his throat to cut." Shak.

eth'ic, n. 1. The science of ethics; also, an ethical system; — the earlier term for ethics, and still sometimes used.
2. Character, or the ideals of character, manifested by a race or people. Cf. ETHOS.

eth'i-cize (ĕth'ĭ-sīz), v. t. & i.; -CIZED (-sīzd); -CIZ'ING (-sīz'ĭng). 1. To make ethical; to consider as an ethical being or in ethical relations.
The idealizing process which . . . ethicizes nature. J. Martineau.
2. To discuss, or be concerned with, ethics. Rare.

eth'ics (ĕth'ĭks), n. (see -ICS). [Cf. F. éthique. See ETHIC; -ICS.] 1. A treatise on morals; specif., the ethical works of Aristotle, known to us in three treatises: the Nicomachean Ethics, probably published by Aristotle's son Nichomachus; the Eudemian Ethics, supposed to have been prepared by Aristotle's pupil Eudemus; and the Magna Moralia, probably an abstract from the preceding.
2. The science of moral duty; more broadly, the science of the ideal human character. The chief problems with which ethics deals concern the nature of the summum bonum, or highest good, the origin and validity of the sense of duty, and the character and authority of moral obligation. The principal ethical theories are: First, such as consider happiness to be the greatest good; — these may be egoistic, as is usually the case with hedonistic and eudæmonistic theories, or altruistic, as utilitaranism. Second, theories of perfectionism, or self-realization. Third, theories resting upon the relation of man to the universe or to divine law, as Stoicism, evolutionism, Christian ethics. Intuitionism and empiricism in ethics are doctrines opposed with respect to the character of the sense of duty. Absolute ethics affirms an unchanging moral code; relative ethics regards moral rules as varying with human development.
3. Moral principles, quality, or practice; a system of moral principles; as, social ethics, medical ethics; the morals of individual action or practice; as, the ethics of a conscientious man, or of a criminal deed.

eth'ide (ĕth'īd; -ĭd; 184), n. Also -id. Chem. Any compound of ethyl of a binary type; as, potassium ethide.

eth'i-dene (-ĭ-dēn), n. [From ETHER.] Ethylidene.

eth'ine (-ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also -in. Chem. Acetylene.

eth'i-on'ic (ĕth'ĭ-ŏn'ĭk; ē'thĭ-), a. [ethyl + thionic.] Chem. Pert. to or designating an unstable acid, $C_2H_6S_2O_7$, known only in solution, obtainable by saturating absolute alcohol or ether with sulphur trioxide and diluting with water.

E'thi-op (ē'thĭ-ŏp), n. [L. Aethiops, Gr. Αἰθίοψ; cf. αἴθειν to burn and ὤψ face.] A native or inhabitant of Ethiopia; in a general sense, a negro or black man. See ETHIOPIAN, n. & a. — E'thi-op, a.

E'thi-o'pi-an (-ō'pĭ-ăn), a. 1. Of or pertaining to Ethiopia, a region anciently called Æthiopia supra Ægyptum (Ethiopia above Egypt) and generally identified with the ancient Cush, or the valley of the Nile above the First Cataract, although also taken as including territories reaching to the Red Sea and the Blue Nile. In modern usage, Ethiopia is: a Officially, the Abyssinian Empire. b Abyssinia together with adjacent southern territories, esp. the domain of the Gallas. c The territories above the First Cataract, an indefinite and extensive area.
2. Of or pertaining to the Ethiopians (see ETHIOPIAN, n., 1); also, designating a branch of the Hamitic languages (see HAMITIC LANGUAGES c, and cf. ETHIOPIC, n. & a).
3. Of, pertaining to, or designating, a negro or blackamoor; as, Ethiopian serenaders.
4. Designating, or pertaining to, one of the five divisions of mankind distinguished by Blumenbach in 1775 and named the Ethiopian race. As now used, the term comprises the Negro, Bantu, and Negrito peoples of Africa together with their descendants, the darker races of Oceania, and (usually) the Australian and (extinct) Tasmanian blacks. The typical Ethiopian is of dark or nearly black complexion, has frizzly black hair, a broad flat nose, scanty beard, thick and everted lips, large teeth, and is prognathous and dolichocephalous. There are, however, wide variations, including at least two very distinct types, the Negro and the Negrito (see these terms). Cf. AUSTRALIAN, BANTU, NEGROID.
Ethiopian eggplant, a species of Solanum (S. integrifolium) sometimes cultivated for its ornamental scarlet or yellow fruit. — E. lily, the calla, 2. — E. pepper. = AFRICAN CUBEBS. — E. region, Zoögeog., a region including Africa south of the Sahara with southern Arabia and, as used by some, Madagascar and the adjacent islands. Among the peculiarities of its mammalian fauna are the numerous forms of lemurs and antelopes, and the absence of bears and deer. Madagascar is often regarded as forming an independent region. See MALAGASY REGION.

E'thi-o'pi-an, n. 1. A native of Ethiopia (see ETHIOPIAN, a., 1); hence: a An ancient Ethiopian, probably of mixed Hamitic and Negro race. b An Abyssinian, of Semitic and Hamitic stock with Negro admixture (see ABYSSINIAN, n., 1). c A member of one of the Hamitic tribes of northeastern Africa, such as the Bejas, Gallas, Somalis, etc. (cf. HAMITE). d A member of any of various Hamitic, Semitic, Negro, and mixed tribes and peoples inhabiting Ethiopia.
2. A negro; a blackamoor.
3. Ethnol. A member of the Ethiopian race.

E'thi-o'pi-an-ism (ē'thĭ-ō'pĭ-ăn-ĭz'm), n. Advocacy of Ethiopian control, esp. in Africa.

E'thi-op'ic (-ŏp'ĭk), a. [L. Aethiopicus, Gr. Αἰθιοπικός.] 1. = ETHIOPIAN, a., 1 & 4.
2. Designating, or relating to, Ethiopic (see ETHIOPIC, n.). Cf. ETHIOPIAN, a., 2.
Ethiopic alphabet, a South Semitic alphabet of doubtful origin, the ancient liturgical script of the Abyssinian Christians. — E. Church. = ABYSSINIAN CHURCH. — E. liturgy, 1, II. — E. version (of the Bible). See VERSION.

ethiops martial. Old Chem. Black oxide of iron.
eth'mo- (ĕth'mō-). A combining form of ethmoid, used esp. in combination with the names of other bones, as in eth/mo-fron'tal, eth/mo-lach'ry-mal, eth/mo-max'il-la-ry, eth/mo-na'sal, eth/mo-pal'a-tal, eth/mo-pre/sphe-noi'dal, eth/mo-sphe'-noid, eth/mo-sphe-noi'dal, denoting connection with or situation between the ethmoid and the frontal, lachrymal, superior maxillary, etc.
eth'moid (ĕth'moid), a. [Gr. ἠθμοειδής like a sieve; ἠθμός sieve + εἶδος form.] Anat. & Zoöl. Pertaining to or designating one or more bones forming a greater or less part of the walls and septum of the nasal cavity. The term is extended to the whole region of the nasal capsule. In man the ethmoid bone is a compound structure and consists of the cribriform plate (which see), with which are connected a median perpendicular plate, forming part of the nasal septum, and two lateral masses. In the teleost fishes there is a single median ethmoid, better termed the supra-ethmoid, above the mesethmoid region, and a pair of lateral ethmoids or ectethmoids (also called prefrontals). See also MESETHMOID and SPHENETHMOID. — n. An ethmoid bone.
eth-moi'dal (ĕth-moi'dăl), a. Pertaining to or designating the region of the ethmoid bone; ethmoid.
ethmoidal cells, Anat., cavities in the lateral masses of the ethmoid (partly completed by adjoining bones) communicating with the nasal fossæ. — e. notch, Anat., a broad cleft or space separating the orbital plates of the frontal bone, occupied by the cribriform plate of the ethmoid. — e. plane, Anat., the plane of the cribriform plate of the ethmoid.
eth'moid-i'tis (ĕth'moid-ī'tĭs), n. [NL.; ethmoid + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of the ethmoid or its sinuses.
eth'mo-tur'bi-nal (ĕth'mō-tûr'bĭ-năl), a. [ethmo- + turbinal.] Anat. & Zoöl. Designating, or pertaining to, the lateral masses of the ethmoid of mammals considered as separate elements. They bear, or consist largely of, turbinal bones. See ETHMOID. — n. An ethmoturbinal bone.
eth'mo-vo'mer-ine (-vō'mĕr-ĭn; -vŏm'ĕr-ĭn), a. [ethmo- + vomerine.] Anat. Pertaining to the vomer and the ethmoid; as, the ethmovomerine plate, a cartilaginous plate in the embryo, from which the ethmoid develops.
eth'narch (ĕth'närk), n. [Gr. ἐθνάρχης; ἔθνος nation + ἀρχός. See -ARCH.] The governor of a province or people.
eth'narch-y (-närk-kĭ), n; pl. -NARCHIES (-kĭz). [Gr. ἐθναρχία.] The dominion of an ethnarch, or his office or rank.
eth'nic (ĕth'nĭk) } a. [L. ethnicus, Gr. ἐθνικός, fr. ἔθνος eth'ni-cal (-nĭ-kăl) } nation, τὰ ἔθνη the nations, heathens, gentiles.] 1. Pertaining to the Gentiles, or nations not converted to Christianity; heathen; pagan; — opposed to Jewish and Christian.
2. Pertaining or peculiar to race; relating to community of physical and mental traits in races, or designating groups or races of mankind discriminated on the basis of common customs and characters.
In order to class peoples, nations, tribes, in a word, "ethnic groups," we ought to take into consideration linguistic differences, ethnic characters, and especially, in my opinion, geographical distribution. J. Denaker.
eth'nic, n. A heathen; a pagan. Obs. Milton.
eth'ni-cal-ly (-nĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. In an ethnical manner.
eth'ni-cism (-sĭz'm), n. 1. Heathenism; paganism; idolatry. Obs. "Taint of ethnicism." B. Jonson.
2. The general character of the non-Hebraic and non-Christian civilizations of antiquity.
eth'ni-co- (ĕth'nĭ-kō-). Combining form for ethnic.
eth'no- (ĕth'nō-). Combining form for ethnic.
eth'no-bot'a-ny (-bŏt'ă-nĭ), n. [ethno- + botany.] Botany that treats of the names, lore, and uses of plants as illustrative or typical of the customs of a race. — eth'no-bo-tan'ic (-bō-tăn'ĭk), eth'no-bo-tan'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a.
eth'no-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. Of, pertaining to, or designating, the process of ethnogeny.
The social mind acting on spontaneous forms of alliance creates the family, the clan, and the tribe, and later the folk and the nation. This is the ethnogenic stage of social evolution, and to it corresponds ethnogenic sociology. F. H. Giddings.
eth-nog'e-ny (ĕth-nŏj'ē-nĭ), n. [ethno- + -geny.] The genesis of races; also, the science which treats of this; ethnology. See ETHNOLOGY.
eth-nog'ra-pher (ĕth-nŏg'rà-fẽr), n. A specialist in ethnography.
eth'no-graph'ic (ĕth'nō-grăf'ĭk) } a. [Cf. F. ethnographique.] eth'no-graph'i-cal (-grăf'ĭ-kăl) } Pertaining to ethnography. — eth'no-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.
eth-nog'ra-phy (ĕth-nŏg'rà-fĭ), n. [ethno- + -graphy: cf. F. ethnographie.] Descriptive anthropology; sometimes, loosely, ethnology. See ANTHROPOLOGY, 1 b; ETHNOLOGY.
eth'no-log'ic (ĕth'nō-lŏj'ĭk) } a. Of or pert. to ethnology.
eth'no-log'i-cal (-lŏj'ĭ-kăl) } — eth'no-log'i-cal-ly, adv.
eth-nol'o-gist (ĕth-nŏl'ō-jĭst), n. One versed in ethnology.
eth-nol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [ethno- + -logy.] The science which treats of the division of mankind into races, their origin, distribution, and relations, and the peculiarities which characterize them. See ANTHROPOLOGY, 1 b. Ethnology and ethnography are often confounded, but the latter is properly restricted to the purely descriptive treatments of peoples and races, while the former denotes their comparative study and analytical classification. Ethnogeny is primarily concerned with the actual evolution of races, one from another, and is concerned purely with blood relationship. Ethnography and ethnogeny are thus branches of ethnology.
Special anthropology . . . hands over the detailed study of the Hominidæ in all their relations to the sister science ethnology, which has been aptly defined as that branch of general anthropology which deals with the relations of the different varieties of mankind to each other. A. H. Keane.
eth'nos (ĕth'nŏs), n. [Gr. ἔθνος nation.] Sociol. a A group of kindred in clan and tribal organization; — contrasted with demos.
With the achievement of confederation and the establishment of kingship, ethnogenic evolution is completed. A gentile folk or ethnos has come into existence. Its further development, if evolution be not arrested at this point, carries it into the new conditions of civic life and demogenic progress. F. H. Giddings.
b The most primitive natural or kindred group. See SOCIUS.
eth'o-log'ic (ĕth'ō-lŏj'ĭk; ē'thō-) } a. [See ETHOLOGY.]
eth'o-log'i-cal (-lŏj'ĭ-kăl) } 1. Treating of, or pertaining to, ethics or morality, or the science of character.
2. Pertaining to the study of manners and customs.
e-thol'o-gist (ē-thŏl'ō-jĭst), n. One versed in ethology.
e-thol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [L. ethologus a depicting of character, Gr. ἠθολογία; ἦθος custom, moral nature + λέγειν to speak.] 1. Ethics; a treatise on morality. Obs.
2. The science of the ethos.
3. Zoöl. = BIONOMICS.
e'thos (ē'thŏs), n. [L., fr. Gr. ἦθος character. See ETHIC.]
1. The character, sentiment, or disposition of a community or people, considered as a natural endowment, the spirit which actuates manners and customs; also, the characteristic tone or genius of an institution or social organization.
2. Æsthetics. The traits in a work of art which express the ideal or typic character — character as influenced by the ethos (sense 1) of a people — rather than realistic or emotional situations or individual character in a narrow sense; — opposed to pathos.
eth-ox'ide (ĕth-ŏk'sīd; -sĭd), n. [ethoxyl + -ide.] Chem. A binary compound of ethoxyl; an ethylate.
eth-ox'y- (ĕth-ŏk'sĭ-). Chem. Combining form for ethoxyl.
eth-ox'yl (-ŏk'sĭl), n. Chem. The univalent radical C_2H_5O, or ethyl plus an atom of oxygen.
eth'yl (ĕth'ĭl), n. [ether + -yl.] Chem. A univalent hydrocarbon radical, C_2H_5, of which ethane is the hydride, ordinary alcohol the hydroxide, ordinary ether the oxide, etc.
eth'yl-am'ine (-ăm'ĭn; -ā-mēn'; 184), n. Also -amin. [ethyl + amine.] Chem. A compound formed by the replacement by ethyl of one, two, or three hydrogen atoms in ammonia and called accordingly mono-, di-, or tri-ethylamine; specif., mono-ethylamine, a colorless, mobile, inflammable liquid, $C_2H_5.NH_2$, very volatile and with an ammoniacal odor. It is a strong base.
eth'yl-ate (ĕth'ĭ-lāt), v. t.; -AT'ED (-lāt'ĕd); -AT'ING (-lāt'ĭng). Chem. To treat so as to cause the introduction of one or more ethyl groups, C_2H_5; as, to ethylate alcohol.
eth'yl-ate (-lāt), n. [From ETHYL.] Chem. A compound derived from ethyl alcohol by the replacement of the hydroxyl hydrogen by a metal; an ethyl alcoholate; as, potassium ethylate, $C_2H_5{\cdot}O{\cdot}K$.
ethyl bromide. Chem. A colorless and very volatile liquid, C_2H_5Br, of aromatic odor, largely used as an anæsthetic.
ethyl butyrate. Chem. A colorless liquid, $C_3H_7CO_2C_2H_5$, found in various fruits and also prepared artificially. Its odor is like that of the pineapple, and it is the principal flavoring matter of rum. It is used under the name of rum essence or rum ether to make a factitious rum.
ethyl chloride. Chem. A colorless liquid, C_2H_5Cl, resembling ethyl bromide but more volatile. It is largely used as a local anæsthetic.
ethyl disulphide. Chem. A colorless, poisonous, inflammable oil, $(C_2H_5)_2S_2$, with a garlicklike odor, made by heating mercaptan with sulphur, and in other ways.
ethyl-ene (ĕth'ĭ-lēn), n. [From ETHYL.] Chem. A colorless, gaseous, unsaturated hydrocarbon, C_2H_4, or $CH_2{:}CH_2$, forming an important ingredient of illuminating gas, and also obtained by the action of concentrated sulphuric acid on alcohol. It forms an explosive mixture with air. It combines directly with chlorine and bromine to form oily liquids, — hence called also olefiant gas.
ethylene bromide or dibromide. Chem. A colorless liquid, $C_2H_4Br_2$, of pleasant odor and taste, formed by the direct union of ethylene and bromine. Sp. gr., 2.18.
ethylene chloride or dichloride. Chem. A heavy colorless liquid, $C_2H_4Cl_2$, of chloroformlike odor and sweetish taste, formed by direct union of ethylene and chlorine or by heating glycol with hydrochloric acid; — called also Dutch liquid, Dutch oil, or oil of the Dutch chemists, because discovered (1795) by four associated chemists of Holland.
ethylene series. Chem. The series of unsaturated hydrocarbons of which ethylene is the type, and represented by the general formula C_nH_{2n}.
e-thyl'ic (ē-thĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing, ethyl; as, ethylic alcohol.
e-thyl'i-dene (-ĭ-dēn), n. Chem. An unsymmetrical bivalent hydrocarbon radical, C_2H_4, isomeric with ethylene but written thus, $CH_3{\cdot}CH$, to distinguish it from ethylene, $CH_2{:}CH_2$. Its compounds are derived from aldehyde.
ethylidene biuret. Chem. A white crystalline substance, $NH{:}(CONH)_2.CHCH_3$, formed by passing cyanic acid into acetaldehyde; — called also trigenic acid.
eth'yl-in (ĕth'ĭ-lĭn), n. Chem. Any one of the several complex ethers of ethyl and glycerin.
ethyl iodide. Chem. A colorless, difficultly inflammable liquid, C_2H_5I, of a garlic odor.
ethyl nitrite. Chem. A colorless or pale yellow liquid, $C_2H_5NO_2$. See spirit of nitrous ether, under SPIRIT.
eth'yl-sul-phu'ric (ĕth'ĭl-sŭl-fū'rĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating an acid (acid ethyl sulphate, $HC_2H_5SO_4$), produced as a thick liquid by the action of sulphuric acid on alcohol. It is an intermediate product in the process of etherification.
e'ti-o-late (ē'tĭ-ō-lāt), v. t. & i.; -LAT'ED (-lāt'ĕd); -LAT'ING (-lāt'ĭng). [F. étioler to blanch, of uncertain origin; cf. OF. esteule straw, stubble, L. stipula.] To become, or cause to become, white or whiter; to whiten, pale, bleach, or blanch, as from exclusion of sunlight or from disease.
e'ti-o-lat'ed (-lāt'ĕd), p. a. Blanched or colorless; specif., Plant Physiol., blanched by the absence of light; — said of plants or parts of plants grown in darkness. The loss of color is caused by the conversion of the green chloroplasts to leucoplasts. Etiolated plants usually look sickly, having long internodes and poorly developed leaves.
e'ti-o-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. The operation or process of, or the condition produced by, etiolating.
e'ti-o-lin (ē'tĭ-ō-lĭn), n. [See ETIOLATE.] A pale yellow pigment found in the plastids of plants grown in darkness. It is convertible into chlorophyll upon exposure to light.
et'i-quette (ĕt'ĭ-kĕt; 277), n. [F., prop., a label, ticket, OF. estuquete, of German origin; cf. LG. stikke peg, pin, tack, stikken to stick, G. stecken. See STICK; cf. TICKET.]
1. The forms required by good breeding, or prescribed by authority, to be observed in social or official life; observance of the proprieties of rank and occasion; conventional decorum; ceremonial code of polite society.
The pompous etiquette of the court. Prescott.
2. A demand made by etiquette. Obs.
3. A ticket; a label, as on a suit of clothes.
et'na (ĕt'nà), n. [From Mt. Etna.] A vessel for heating liquids, consisting of a cup fixed in a saucer in which alcohol is burned.
E'ton coat or jack'et (ē'tŭn). 1. A jacket of a pattern originally worn by students at Eton College, England, having an open front and broad lapels and being cut square at the hips. A large stiff turn-over collar is usually worn with the coat.
2. A similar jacket worn by women.
E-to'ni-an (ē-tō'nĭ-ăn), n. A student or former student of Eton College, at Eton, in Buckinghamshire, England. — a. Of or pertaining to Eton or Eton College.
E-tru'ri-an (ē-trōō'rĭ-ăn), a. Of or relating to Etruria; Etruscan. "Etrurian shades." Milton. — n. An Etruscan.
E-trus'can (ē-trŭs'kăn), a. [L. Etruscus.] Of or pertaining to Etruria or its inhabitants, or designating their art, language, or civilization. At the height of its power, previous to the rise of Rome, Etruria comprised the region of Italy between the Arno and the Tiber and inland to the Apennines. The origin of the Etruscans and their civilization, from which that of Rome was largely developed, is usually ascribed either to central Europe (see HALLSTATT CIVILIZATION) or to ASIA MINOR, or to both. In any case the race was of mixed type and their culture profoundly modified by their extensive commerce with Greece and the East. Their language is of unknown affinities, although the alphabet is probably of Chalcidic origin.
E-trus'can, n. A native of Etruria; a member of the Etruscan race, who called themselves Raseni; also, their language.
-ette (-ĕt). [F. -ette, fem. of -et.] A diminutive suffix in nouns of recent borrowing from the French; as, cigarette, statuette, pianette. The diminutive force is often lost; as in etiquette, serviette. -ette has been sparingly added to native words, wagonette and leatherette being perh. the only well-established cases. On the analogy of leatherette there is a commercial use of -ette to form names of imitation or substitutive material; as, plushette, Brussellette carpets.
et'tle (ĕt'l), v. t. & i.; ET'TLED (-ld); ET'TLING (-lĭng). [Icel. ætla.] Obs or Scot. & Dial. Eng. 1. To intend, plan, or design; to try; to endeavor to do, obtain, or effect.
2. To aim or direct, as a blow, or (fig.) as speech or action.
3. To prepare or to arrange; hence, to use economically; to deal out sparingly.
4. To suppose or conjecture; to consider.
et'tle, v. i. To take one's course; also, to take aim (at). Obs or Scot. & Dial. Eng.
et'tle, n. An attempt or endeavor; aim; intent; also, an opportunity. Scot. & Dial. Eng.
‖ é'tude' (ā'tüd'), n. [F. See STUDY.] A study; specif., Music, a piece for practice of some special point of technical execution; an exercise.
e-tui', or et-wee' (ā-twē'; ĕt-wē'), n. [F. étui.] A case for one or several small articles; esp., a box in which articles of toilet or of daily personal use are carried.
et-ym'ic (ĕt-ĭm'ĭk), a. Relating to the etymon.
et'y-mo-log'i-cal (ĕt'ĭ-mō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. [L. etymologicus, Gr. ἐτυμολογικός: cf. F. étymologique. See ETYMOLOGY.] Pertaining to etymology. — et'y-mo-log'i-cal-ly, adv.
et'y-mo-log'i-con (-ĭ-kŭn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ἐτυμολογικόν, prop. neut. sing. from ἐτυμολογικός.] An etymological dictionary or manual.
et'y-mol'o-gist (-mŏl'ō-jĭst), n. [Cf. F. étymologiste.] A student of etymology.
et'y-mol'o-gize (-jīz), v. t.; -GIZED (-jīzd); -GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). [Cf. F. étymologiser.] To give the etymology of (a word). — v. i. To study or form etymologies. — et'y-mol'o-gi-za'tion (-jĭ-zā'shŭn), n.
et'y-mol'o-gy (-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [L. etymologia, Gr. ἐτυμολογία; ἔτυμον etymon + λόγος discourse, de-eu- (ū-). [Gr. εὖ well, orig. neut. of ἐύς good; perh. connected with Skr. su well, and from the same root as E. is; or with Skr. vasu good, and fr. the same root as E. was.] A prefix used frequently in composition, signifying well, good, advantageous; — the opposite of dys-.

Et'zel (ĕt'sĕl), n. [G.] In German legend, a character representing the historical Attila, king of the Huns. In the Nibelungenlied he is a wise, gentle, and high-minded king, who marries Kriemhild after Siegfried's death. Cf. ATLI, KRIEMHILD.

eu'ca-ine (ū'kȧ-ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. [eu- + cocaine.] Pharm. Either of two distinct artificial organic bases, distinguished as eucaine A ($C_{19}H_{21}O_4N$) and eucaine B ($C_{15}H_{21}O_2N$) and used, in the form of hydrochlorides, as local anæsthetics.

eu-cal'rite (ū-kȧ'rīt; ū-kăl'rīt), n. [Gr. εὐκαιρος seasonable, opportune; εὖ well, good + καιρός season.] Min. A grayish, metallic-looking selenide of copper and silver, CuAgSe; — so called on account of its being found soon after the discovery of the metal selenium. Sp. gr., 7.50.

eu'ca-lypt (ū'kȧ-lĭpt), n. Any tree of the genus Eucalyptus. — eu'ca-lyp'tic (-lĭp'tĭk), a.

eu'ca-lyp'tol (-lĭp'tōl; -tŏl), n. [Eucalyptus + L. oleum oil.] Chem. Cineol.

Eu'ca-lyp'tus (-lĭp'tŭs), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. καλυπτός covered. The buds of Eucalyptus have a hemispherical or conical covering, which falls off at anthesis.] 1. Bot. A genus of myrtaceous trees containing about 150 species, all but a few of which are confined to Australia and Tasmania, where they are the most important and characteristic timber trees. They have rigid, entire leaves usually placed vertically, the younger often differing remarkably in shape. Most of them secrete resinous gums, whence they are called gum trees, and their timber is used for many purposes. E. amygdalina, the peppermint tree, is the tallest known tree, often attaining a height of over 400 feet. E. globulus is the blue gum: E. gigantea, the stringy bark; E. gunnii, called cider tree in Tasmania, yields a refreshing drink from wounds made in the bark in the spring. Botany Bay kino is the product of various ironbarks of this genus. Other species yield oils, tars, acids, dyes, and tans. Eucalypts have been supposed to make beneficial changes in malarial regions, and have been extensively planted in California, Florida, and southern Europe for that reason; but investigations appear to show that the only beneficial influence is the removal of some excess water by transpiration of moisture from the leaf surface and a limited antasthmatic action due to escape of cineol into the air and its conversion into ozone.
2. [l. c.] (pl. EUCALYPTI). A tree of this genus; a eucalypt.

eucalyptus oil. An essential oil derived from the leaves of any of numerous species of Eucalyptus; specif., in the American and British pharmacopœias, an oil containing a relatively large amount of cineol, as that from E. globulus or allied species. The various forms of eucalyptus oil differ widely in properties, some of the chief constituents of the various kinds being cineol, citral, citronellal, phellandrene, pinene, and cumic aldehyde. A few eucalyptus oils are used in perfumery.

Eucharis (E. amazonica). Reduced.

Eu'cha-ris (ū'kȧ-rĭs), n. [NL., fr. L. eucharis agreeable, Gr. εὐχαρις. See EUCHARIST.] Bot. A small genus of South American scapose amaryllidaceous plants, most of which are cultivated for their handsome white flowers, often called Amazon lilies. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Eu'cha-rist (-rĭst), n. [L. eucharistia, Gr. εὐχαριστία, lit., a giving of thanks, fr. εὐχάριστος grateful; εὖ + χαρίζεσθαι to show favor, fr. χάρις favor, grace, thanks; akin to χαιρειν to rejoice, and perh. to E. yearn: cf. F. eucharistie, OF. also eucariste.] 1. Eccl. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper; the solemn act or ceremony of commemorating the death of Christ, in the use of bread and wine as the appointed emblems; the Communion; also, the consecrated elements, esp. the bread.
2. [l. c.] A vessel for consecrated bread; a pyx. Obs.
3. [l. c.] Act of giving thanks; thanksgiving.
The region of eucharist and hallelujahs. South.

eu'cha-ris'tial (ū'kȧ-rĭs'chăl), n. Eccl. A vessel for consecrated bread.

eu'cha-ris'tic (-rĭs'tĭk) } a. [Cf. F. eucharistique.]
eu'cha-ris'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } 1 Pert. to the Lord's Supper.
2. Giving thanks; expressing thankfulness, rejoicing.
The eucharistical part of our daily devotions. Ray.

eu'cha-ris'tize (-tīz), v. t., -TIZED (-tīzd); -TIZING (-tīz-ĭng). To consecrate as elements of the Lord's Supper.

Eu'chite (ū'kīt), n. [LGr. Εὐχῖται, pl., fr. Gr. εὐχή prayer.] Eccl. Hist. a One of a sect of fanatical vagrant Oriental Christians of the 4th to the 7th century who supported themselves by beggary, asserting that they passed their whole time in prayer. Their earliest known leader was Adelphius of Mesopotamia. Called also Adelphian, Massalian, Messalian. b A member of any of various later sects like the original Euchites, as a sect of Thracian dualists in the 11th century.

eu-chlo'rine (ū-klō'rĭn; -rēn; 184), n. [eu- + Gr. χλωρός pale green.] Chem. A yellow or greenish yellow gas, first prepared by Davy, evolved from potassium chlorate and hydrochloric acid. It is a mixture of chlorine dioxide (ClO_2) and chlorine. — eu-chlo'ric (-rĭk), a.

eu'cho-lo'gi-on (ū'kō-lō'jĭ-ŏn) } n. [NL. euchologion, Gr. eu-chol'o-gy (ū-kŏl'ō-jĭ) } εὐχολόγιον prayer book; εὐχή prayer, vow + λέγειν to say, speak.] Eccl. A formulary of prayers; also, a book of ritual, esp. that of the Eastern Church. — eu'cho-log'i-cal (ū'kō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a.

eu'chre (ū'kẽr), n. [Of uncertain origin.] 1. A game at cards, the lowest card used being the seven, or the nine, spot, in which a player or side not taking at least three tricks, in a hand in which he has made the trump suit, fails to count (is euchred), and his opponent counts two. In trumps, the joker, if used, is highest, followed by the knave (right bower), the other knave of the same color (left bower), ace, king, queen, ten, etc.
2. Failure to take three tricks in a hand at euchre by a player who has made the trump.

eu'chre, v. t.; EU'CHRED (-kẽrd); EU'CHRING (-krĭng). To defeat in a hand at euchre (an opponent who named the trump suit); hence, Slang, to defeat in any science.

eu-chro'ic (ū-krō'ĭk), a. [Gr. εὔχροος well-colored; εὖ well + χρόα color.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a colorless crystalline organic acid, $C_{12}H_4O_8N_2$, the di-imide of mellitic acid. By reduction it is changed to a dark blue substance (euchrone), — hence its name.

eu'chro-ite (ū'krō-ĭt), n. [See EUCHROIC.] Min. A basic arsenate of copper, $Cu_3(AsO_4)_2Cu(OH)_2{\cdot}6H_2O$, in emerald-green orthorhombic crystals. H., 3.5–4. Sp. gr., 3.39.

eu'clase (ū'klās), n. [eu- + Gr. κλάσις a breaking.] Min. A brittle silicate of beryllium and aluminium, $HBeAlSiO_5$, occurring in pale yellow, green, or blue prismatic crystals; — so called from its perfect cleavage. It is sometimes used as a gem. H., 7.5. Sp. gr., 3.05–3.10.

Eu-cle'a (ū-klē'ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. εὐκλεια glory; εὖ well + κλέος glory; — in allusion to the beauty of the foliage.] Bot. A genus of African ebenaceous trees and shrubs distinguished by the dicœcious racemose flowers. They have extremely hard wood, E. pseudebenus yielding Orange River ebony. The fruit of this and other species is edible.

Eu'clid (ū'klĭd), n. [L. Euclides, Gr. Εὐκλείδης.] A Greek geometer of about 300 B. C.; also, his treatise on geometry, and hence, the principles of geometry, in general.

Eu-clid'e-an (ū-klĭd'ē-ăn; ū'klĭ-dē'ăn; 277), Eu-clid'i-an (ū-klĭd'ĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Euclid; specif., Geom., adopting Euclid's assumptions with respect to space; pert. to geometry as developed in Euclid's "Elements."
Euclidean construction, a geometric construction by the use of ruler and compasses. — E. geometry, Math., ordinary geometry; the geometry of Euclidean space. — E. space, Geom., the kind of space to which the axioms and definitions of Euclid, relative to straight lines and parallel lines, apply; — called also flat space, and homaloidal space. In Euclidean space the Riemannian measure of curvature, $\frac{1}{k^2}$, is 0; hence: (1) The straight line is infinite. (2) The sum of the three angles of a plane triangle is a straight angle. Rigid bodies may be translated and rotated every way.

Eu-cryph'i-a (ū-krĭf'ĭ'-ȧ), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. κρύφιος concealed; — so named because the corolla is concealed by the calyx.] Bot. A small genus of plants, constituting the family Eucryphiaceæ (order Hypericales), natives of Australia and Chile. They are tall evergreen trees with opposite leaves and showy flowers.

eu-cyc'lic (ū-sĭk'lĭk; -sī'klĭk), a. [eu- + cyclic.] Bot. Cyclic with alternate isomerous whorls.

2. Astrol. The eleventh house, the source of good things.

eu'dæ-mo'ni-a (ū'dē-mō'nĭ-ȧ), n. [Gr. εὐδαιμονία.] Well-being; happiness; — used esp. for Aristotle's conception of a life of action governed by reason as the supreme human felicity.
The aim of all moral action, says Aristotle, is admitted on all hands to be happiness, or eudæmonia. Eudæmonia results from the performance of the peculiar work belongs to man as man. Morris (Uebersweg).

eu'dæ-mon'ic, eu'de-mon'ic (ū'dē-mŏn'ĭk) } a. [See eu'dæ-mon'i-cal, eu'de-mon'i-cal (-mŏn'ĭ-kăl) } EUDÆMONICS.] Producing happiness; based on the idea of happiness as the proper end of conduct; of or pertaining to eudæmonics.

eu'dæ-mon'ics, eu'de-mon'ics (-ĭks), n. [Gr. εὐδαμονικός conducive to happiness. See EUDÆMONISM.] 1. Practice of eudæmonism; art or means of attaining happiness.
2. The science of happiness; — contr. with aretaics.

eu-dæ'mon-ism, eu-de'mon-ism (ū-dē'mŏn-ĭz'm), n. [Gr. εὐδαμονισμός a thinking happy, fr. εὐδαίμων blessed with a good genius, happy. See EU-; DEMON.] That system of ethics which defines and enforces moral obligation by its relation to happiness or personal well-being. Eudæmonism is often used for the Aristotelian conception of happiness, in contrast to hedonism, which identified happiness with pleasure. See EUDÆMONIA, ETHICS.

eu-dæ'mon-is'tic, eu-de'mon-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk) } a. Of

eu-dæ'mo-ny, eu-de'mo-ny (ū-dē'mō-nĭ), n. [Gr. εὐδαιμονία.] Well-being; happiness. Rare.

eu-di'a-lyte (ū-dī'ȧ-līt), n. [Gr εὐδιάλυτος easy to dissolve; — so called because easily dissolvable in acids. See EU-; DIALYSIS.] Min. A brownish red metasilicate, chiefly of iron, zirconium, and calcium, occurring in crystals or masses. It is optically positive. H., 5–5.5. Sp. gr., 2.9–3.0.

eu'di-om'e-ter (ū'dĭ-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [Gr. εὐδία fair, clear weather, fr. εὐδιος fine, clear (said of the air or weather) + -meter.] Chem. An instrument for the volumetric measurement and analysis of gases; — so named because formerly used to determine the purity of the air. It is usually a finely graduated and calibrated glass tube, open at the bottom, and having near the top a pair of platinum wires fused in, to allow the passage of an electric spark (in order to cause reaction by ignition when desired), as the process involves the explosion and combustion of one of the ingredients to be determined. The operation is conducted in a trough of mercury, or sometimes over water. Cf. BURETTE. Ure's eudiometer has the tube bent in the form of a U. — eu'di-o-met'ric (-ō-mĕt'rĭk), eu'di-o-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kăl), a. — eu'di-o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

Eu'dist (ū'dĭst), n. R. C. Ch. A member of the "Congregation of Jesus and Mary," established by Jean Eudes at Caen, France, in 1643.

Eu-dox'i-an (ū-dŏk'sĭ-ăn), n. Eccl. Hist. A follower of Eudoxius, patriarch of Antioch and Constantinople in the 4th century, and a celebrated defender of the doctrines of Arius. — Eu-dox'i-an, a.

eu-dox'ine (-sĭn; -sēn; 184), n. Also -in. [Cf. Gr. εὔδοξος of good repute.] Pharm. A reddish yellow powder, used as a remedy for diarrhœa, indigestion, etc. It is the bismuth salt of nosophen.

eu-gal'lol (ū-găl'ōl; -ŏl), n. [eu- + gallic + 3d -ol. Cf. PYROGALLOL.] Pharm. A brownish yellow sirupy mass, used externally (in acetone solution) in the treatment of psoriasis. It is pyrogallol mono-acetate.

Eu-ge'ni-a (ū-jē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after Prince Eugene of Savoy.] Bot. A large genus of myrtaceous trees and shrubs widely distributed in the tropics of both hemispheres. They have aromatic leaves and tetramerous flowers with baccate fruit. The wood is often hard and valuable; and the bark of some species is used in tanning and in medicine. Some species are cultivated in greenhouses.

eu-gen'ic (ū-jĕn'ĭk), a. [Gr. εὐγενής.] Pertaining to improvement of offspring; also, well born; of high birth.

e-typ'ic (ē-tĭp'ĭk), e-typ'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [e- + typical.] Biol. Lacking conformity to a type. — e-typ'i-cal-ly, adv.

Eu. Abbr. Chem. [Without period, Eu]. Europium.

E. U. Abbr. Evangelical Union.

Eu'as-te'ri-æ (ū'ăs-tē'rĭ-ē), n. pl. [NL.; eu- + Gr. ἀστέριος starry.] Zool. A suborder of starfishes having opposite ambulacral ossicles meeting like the rafters of a roof. It includes all existing forms.

Eu-bœ'an (ū-bē'ăn), a. = EUBOIC. — n. One of the people of Eubœa.

Eu-bo'ic (ū-bō'ĭk), a. [L. Euboicus, Gr. Εὐβοικός, fr. Εὔβοια Eubœa.] Of or pertaining to the island of Eubœa, or Evvia, or designating the sea which separates it from the Greek coast. Cf. CHALCIDIAN.

Eu-bou'leus (ū-bōō'lŭs; ū-bou'-), n. [Gr. Εὐβουλεύς.] Gr. Myth. See THESMOPHORIA.

eu'ca-lin (ū'kȧ-lĭn), n. Also eu'ca-lin. [So called because sometimes obtained from the Eucalyptus.] Chem. An unfermentable sugar formed in the decomposition of melitose and found also in lerp.

eu'ca-lyp'tene (ū'kȧ-lĭp'tēn), n. [Cf. EUCALYPTOL.] Chem. A hydrocarbon obtained by decomposition of eucalyptol.

eu'ca-lyp'ti (-lĭp'tī), n. [NL.] Pl. of EUCALYPTUS, 2.

eu'ca-lyp-tog'ra-phy (-lĭp-tŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [Eucalyptus + -graphy.] A treatise upon, or study of, the genus Eucalyptus.

eu-ceph'a-lous (ū-sĕf'ȧ-lŭs), a. [eu- + cephalous.] Zoöl. Having a well-developed head; — said of certain dipterous larvæ.

Eu'cha-ris mite = BULB MITE.

eu'cha-ris'ti-cal-ly, adv. of EUCHARISTICAL.

eu'chi-nine (ū'kĭ-nĭn; -nēn; 184), n. Also -nin. = EUQUININE.

eu'chlor-hy'dri-a (ū'klōr-hī'drĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; eu- + chlorhydric.] Med. Presence of normal amount of hydrochloric acid in the gastric juice [Obs.] eu'cho-logue, n. A euchologion.

eu'chre-ist (ū'kẽr-ĭst), n. A euchre player.

eu'chrome, n. [eu- + chrome.] Cappagh brown. [CHROIC.]

eu'chrone (ū'krōn), n. See EUCHRE.

eu'chy-my (ū'kĭ-mĭ), n. [eu- + Gr. χυμός juice.] Med. Good state of the bodily fluids. Obs. — eu'chy-mous (-mŭs), a. Obs.

Eu-cir'ri-pe'di-a, n. pl. [NL.; eu- + Cirripedia.] Zoöl. A suborder of Cirripedia consisting of the more typical forms as distinguished from the Rhizocephala; — coextensive with Cirripedia in the narrow sense.

Eu-cle'i-dæ (ū-klē'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. = COCHLIDIDÆ.

Eu'cli-on-ism, n. [From L. Euclio, -onis, name of a miser in a play by Plautus.] Stinginess. Obs.

Eu-nem'i-dæ (ū-nĕm'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. εὐνήμις, -ίδος, well-greaved.] Zoöl. A family of beetles closely related to, and now sometimes merged with, the Elateridæ.

eu'co-lite (ū'kō-līt), n. [Gr. εὔκολος well satisfied, i.e., with its composition.] A mineral similar to eudialyte, but optically negative.

eu-cone (ū-kōn'), a. [eu- + cone.] Zoöl. Having fully developed crystalline cones in the ommatidia; — said of the eyes of insects and crustaceans.

Eu'co-pep'o-da (ū'kō-pĕp'ō-dȧ), n. pl. [NL. See EU-; COPEPODA.] Zoöl. A suborder of Copepoda consisting of the typical free-swimming forms and the lernæans, as distinguished from the Branchiura.

eu'cra-site (ū'kra-sīt), n. [See EUCRASY.] Min. A variety of thorite.

eu'cra-sy (-sĭ), n. [Gr. εὐκρασία; εὐκρός well-tempered; εὖ well + κεραννύναι to mix, temper.] Med. A normal state of health; physical well-being.

Eu-cryph'i-a'ce-æ (ū-krĭf'ĭ-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] See EUCRYPHIA. — eu-cryph'i-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

eu-cryp'tite (ū-krĭp'tīt), n [Gr. εὐκρυπτος easily hidden.] Min. A colorless or white silicate of lithium and aluminium, $LiAlSiO_4$, occurring in hexagonal crystals. Sp. gr., 2.67.

euc'tic (ŭk'tĭk), a. [Gr. εὐκτικός.] Expressing a wish; supplicatory. Obs.

eu-dæ'mon-ize, eu-de'mon-ize, v. i. To esteem happy; felicitate. Rare.

eu'dai-mo'ni-a (ū'dī-mō'nĭ-ȧ), eu-dai'mon-ism (ū-dī'mŏn-ĭz'm; ū-dī'-), eu-dai'mon-ist, etc. Vars. of EUDÆMONIA, EUDÆMONISM, etc.

Eu-de'mi-an (ū-dē'mĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Eudemus. — Eudemian Ethics. See under ETHICS, 1.

eu-de'mon-o-log'i-cal (ū-dē'mŏn-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. = EUDÆMONISTIC. Cent. Dict.

Eu-den'dri-um (ū-dĕn'drĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. δενδρίον, dim. of δένδρον a tree] Zoöl. A genus of gymnoblastic hydrozoans forming a branching colony with a chitinous perisarc.

eu-der'mol (ū-dẽr'mōl; -mŏl), n. [eu- + dermo- + 3d -ol.] Pharm. An ointment chiefly of lanolin impregnated with salicylate of nicotine for use in skin diseases.

eu-did'y-mite (ū-dĭd'ĭ-mīt), n. [eu- + Gr. δίδυμος double, twin. It always occurs in twin crystals.] Min. A white glassy silicate of sodium and beryllium, $HNaBeSi_2O_8$. H., 6. Sp. gr., 2.55.

eu'di-pleu'ral (ū'dĭ-plōō'rȧl), a. [eu- + Gr. δίς double + πλευρά side.] Biol. Bilaterally symmetrical Eu-do'ra (ū-dō'rȧ), n. [L., fr. Gr. Εὐδώρα; cf. εὖ well, and δῶρον gift.] Lit., generous; — fem prop. name. L. id; F. Eudore (ū'dōr').

Eu'do-ri'na (ū'dō-rī'nȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. εὔδωρος generous.] Zoöl. A genus of colony-forming flagellate infusorians which produces sharply distinguished male and female gametes.

Eu-dro'mi-as (ū-drō'mĭ-ăs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. εὐδρομιας a good runner.] Zoöl. The genus of plovers which includes the common dotterel of Europe.

E'u-dyp'tes (ū-dĭp'tēz), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. δύπτης a diver.] Zoöl. A genus of penguins, syn. of Catarractes, the genus containing the crested penguins.

Eu-ech'i-noi'de-a (ū-ĕk'ĭ-noi'dē-ȧ), n. pl. [NL.; eu- + Echinoidea.] Zoöl. A subclass of sea urchins consisting of all except the Palæchinoidea.

eu-e'mer-ism (ū-ē'mẽr-ĭz'm; ū-ĕm'ẽr-), eu-e'mer-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), etc. Vars. of EUHEMERISM, etc.

Eu-er'ge-tes (ū-ẽr'jē-tēz), n. Bib. Lit., benefactor; — a title borne by Ptolemy II. and VII., kings of Egypt.

eu'fu-ism. Euphuism. Ref. Sp.

Eug. Abbr. Eugen; Eugene.

Eu'ga-noi'de-i (ū'gȧ-noi'dē-ī), n. pl. [NL.; eu- + NL. Ganoidei. See GANOID.] Zoöl. A group which includes the bony ganoids, as the gar pikes.

‖ eu'ge (ū'jē), n. [L., well done! brave! Gr. εὖγε.] An expression of "well done," or the like, by way of approval. Obs.

Eu-gene' (ū-jēn'; ū'jēn), n. [F. Eugène, L. Eugenius, Gr. Εὐγένιος, fr. εὐγενής well-born, of noble race.] Masc. prop. name. L. Eugenius (ū-jē'nĭ-ŭs); F. Eugène (ū'zhĕn'); It. Eugenio (ā-ōō-jĕn'yō); Sp. Eugenio (ā-ōō-hā'nyō; 172); Pg. Eugenio (ā-ōō-zhā'nyō); G. Eugen (oi'gĕn; oi-gā'n'), Eugenius (oi-gā'nĭ-ŏōs).

eu-gen'e-sis (ū-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [eu- + -genesis.] Biol. Fertility between hybrids. — eu'ge-nes'ic (ū'jē-nĕs'ĭk), eu'ge-net'ic (-nĕt'ĭk), a.

Eu-ge'ni-a (ū-jē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [L., eu-gen'ics (ū-jĕn'ĭks), n. The science of improving stock, whether human or animal, or of improving plants.

eu'ge-nin (ū'jē-nĭn), n. [See EUGENIA.] Chem. A colorless crystalline substance extracted from oil of cloves; — called also clove camphor. It is isomeric with eugenol.

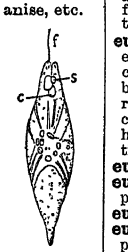
eu'ge-nol (-nōl; -nŏl), n. [Eugenia + -ol.] Chem. A colorless aromatic liquid, $C_{10}H_{12}O_2$, related to phenol, and called also eugenic acid. It is a chief constituent of oil of cloves, and occurs in the oils of pimento, star anise, etc.

eu'ge-nol-ate (-āt), n. Chem A salt of eugenol, analogous to the phenolates.

Eu-gle'na (ū-glē'nȧ), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. γλήνη pupil of the eye, socket of a joint.] Zoöl. A genus of simple fresh-water flagellate infusorians having an elongate body with a distinct gullet at the anterior end from which a long flagellum protrudes. E. viridis is the best-known species. It is of a bright green color, due to the presence of chlorophyll, with a spot of bright red pigment near the anterior end, and contains grains of a starchlike substance called paramylum. It reproduces by binary or multiple fission while encysted.



Euglena. f Flagellum. c Contractile Vacuole. s Pigment Spot Much enlarged.

eu'gra-nit'ic (ū'grȧ-nĭt'ĭk), a. [eu- + granitic.] Petrog. Pert. to, or resembling, normal granite. eugranitic structure, a structure possessed by certain igneous rocks, in which the grains of the different minerals are all of about the same medium size, and similar in form.

eu-ha'ges (ū-hā'jēz), n. pl. [L., prob. fr. Gr. εὐαγής holy, righteous.] Prophets, or seers, — one of the three traditional orders of the Celtic priesthood.

eu'har-mon'ic (ū'här-mŏn'ĭk), a. [eu- + harmonic] Music. Producing mathematically perfect harmony or concord; sweetly or perfectly harmonious eu-he'dral (ū-hē'drȧl), a. [eu- + Gr. ἕδρα seat or base] Petrog. Well-faced; completely bounded by crystal planes.

eu-he'mer-ism (ū-hē'mĕr-ĭz'm; ū-hĕm'ĕr-), n. [L. Euhemerus, Gr. Εὐήμερος, a philosopher, about 300 B. C.] The theory, held by Euhemerus, that the gods of mythology were but deified mortals, and their deeds only the amplification in imagination of human acts; hence, interpretation of myths as traditional accounts of historical personages and events. — eu-he'mer-ist, n. — eu-he'mer-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a.

eu-he'mer-ize (-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). To interpret (mythology) on the theory of euhemerism.

eu-la'li-a (ū-lā'lĭ-ȧ), n. [NL; prob. fr. the personal name Eulalia (which see, below).] 1. [cap.] Bot. a Syn. of POLLINIA. b Syn. of XIPHAGROSTIS.

2. Hort. Any of several ornamental grasses belonging to the genus Xiphagrostis, esp. X. sinensis, often cultivated as a lawn plant for its graceful striped leaves

Eu'len-spie'gel, Tyll (tĭl oi'lĕn-shpē'gĕl; -spē'gĕl). [G., owlglass.] The hero of a German popular comic tale which relates the freaks, pranks, drolleries, fortunes, and misfortunes of a wandering Jack-of-all-trades.

Eu-le'ri-an (ū-lē'rĭ-ăn; oi-), a. Of or pertaining to Leonhard Euler (1707–83), the Swiss mathematician, or his investigations; — used in various phrases; as:

Eulerian constant, Math., the limit of the series $1+\frac{1}{2}+\frac{1}{3}+\frac{1}{4}+\ldots+\frac{1}{n}-\log n$ for n infinite; approximately 0.5772 . . . , used in calculating log $\Gamma(a)$. — E. equation. Math. a The addition theorem of elliptic integrals. b Any one of the system of ordinary hydrodynamical equations in which the components of the velocity at a definite point (and not of a definite particle, as in the Lagrangian equations) are the variables. — E. integral, of the first kind, $\int_0^x x^{a-1}(1-x)^{b-1}dx$, denoted by $B(a, b)$ or $B(b, a)$; of the second kind, $\int_0^\infty e^{-x}x^{a-1}dx$, the Gamma function of a, denoted by $\Gamma(a)$, or by $\pi(a-1)$ according to Gauss. This latter extremely important function is a kind of generalization of the factorial $\Gamma^a = 1.2.3. \ldots a$. — E. method (in hydrodynamics), Math., the ordinary method employing Eulerian equations. — E motion, a movement of the geographical pole by which it tends to describe a circle of radius 0.15″ in a period of about 429 days (called the E period). The movement, as modified by meteorological and other causes, gives a practical identity with the Chandler period (of 428 days) as found by observation.

Eu'ler's for'mu-la (oi'lĕrz). Engin. A general formula relating to the strength of a long strut, obtained by mathematical analysis assuming the strut to be initially very slightly bent and neglecting the $\left(\frac{dy}{dx}\right)^2$ term in the curvature equation. It is $P = c\frac{\pi^2 EI}{l^2}$, where P = axial load; E = Young's modulus; I = moment of inertia of transverse section of strut; l = length of strut; c = a constant depending upon the manner of fixing the ends.

Euler's formulæ. Math. Expressions for cosine and sine as half the sum and difference of two imaginary exponentials.

Euler's theorem. Math. The analytical theorem expressed by the equation $\frac{1}{R}=\frac{\cos^2\phi_1}{R_1}+\frac{\cos^2\phi_2}{R_2}$, where R_1, R_2, are the principal radii of curvature (at a point P of a surface) and R is the radius of curvature of any normal section inclined ϕ_1 and ϕ_2 to the principal normal sections.

eu-lo'gi-a (ū-lō'jĭ-ȧ), n.; pl. -GIÆ (-ē). [LL., fr. Gr. εὐλογία eulogy, blessing. See EULOGY.] Eccl. a Orig., the Eucharist. b In the early church, a portion of the consecrated bread carried to communicants unable to attend the Eucharist. c East. Church. Eucharistic bread blessed, but not consecrated, distributed after the Eucharist to those who have not communicated; — called also antidoron and sometimes blessed bread. Cf. PAIN BÉNIT, HOLY BREAD b.

eu'lo-gis'tic (-jĭs'tĭk) } a. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by, eulogy; bestowing praise, panegyrical, commendatory; laudatory; as, eulogistic speech. — eu'lo-gis'ti-cal-ly, adv.

eu-lo'gi-um (ū-lō'jĭ-ŭm), n; pl. E. -UMS (-ŭmz), L. -GIA (-ȧ). [LL. See EULOGY.] Eulogy.

eu'lo-gize (ū'lō-jīz), v. t.; EU'LO-GIZED (-jīzd); EU'LO-GIZ'ING (-jīz'ĭng). To speak or write in strong commendation of; to extol in speech or writing; to praise.

eu'lo-gy (-jĭ), n.; pl. -GIES (-jĭz) [Gr. εὐλογία, from εὔλογος well speaking, εὖ well + λέγειν to speak: cf. LL. eulogium. Cf. EULOGIUM; see LEGEND.] 1. A composition, esp. a set oration, in commendation of something, as of the character and services of a deceased person; also, expression characteristic of eulogies; praise; laudation.

Eulogies turn into elegies. Spenser.

2. Eccl. = EULOGIA. Obs.

Syn. — See ENCOMIUM.

eu'ly-tite (ū'lĭ-tīt), n. Also eu'ly-tine (-tĭn; -tēn; 184). [eu- + Gr. λυτός soluble, fr. λύειν to dissolve.] Min A silicate of bismuth, $Bi_4Si_3O_{12}$, occurring usually in minute dark brown or grayish tetrahedral crystals. H., 4.5. Sp. gr., 6.11.

Eu-men'i-dæ (ū-mĕn'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. εὐμενής well-disposed.] Zoöl. A large family of true wasps of solitary habits. Their nests are variously constructed by the different species, and commonly provisioned with caterpillars, for the nourishment of their young. Eu'me-nes (ū'mē-nēz), the typical genus, contains species that build cells of mud, which in some cases have the form of a small round vase with a short narrow neck. See POTTER WASP.

Eu-men'i-des (-dēz), n. pl. [L., fr. Gr. Εὐμενίδες, lit., giving a sweet, softened tone of clarinetlike quality. gracious goddesses.] The Erinys. See ERINYS.

eu'my-ce'tes (ū'mĭ-sē'tēz), n. pl. [NL.; eu- + -mycetes.] Bot. A class of the Thallophyta comprising all the true fungi as distinguished from the various classes of algæ or seaweeds. See FUNGI, THALLOPHYTA.

Eu-no'mi-an (ū-nō'mĭ-ăn), n. Eccl. Hist. A follower of Eunomius, bishop of Cyzicus (4th century A. D.); an Anomœan (which see). — Eu-no'mi-an, a.

eu'nuch (ū'nŭk), n. [L. eunuchus, Gr. εὐνοῦχος, prop., keeping or guarding the couch; εὐνή couch, bed + ἔχειν to have, hold, keep.] A castrated male person, orig one in charge of a harem or employed in a palace as a chamberlain; hence, formerly, any chamberlain. Cf. CASTRATO. Eunuchs in ancient times often gained high rank, sometimes becoming rulers.—eu'nuch-al (-ăl), a.

Eu-om'pha-lus (ū-ŏm'fȧ-lŭs), n [NL.; eu- + Gr. ὀμφαλός the navel.] Paleon. A large genus of extinct Paleozoic and Mesozoic gastropods with a depressed conical or discoidal widely umbilicate shell eu-on'y-min (ū-ŏn'ĭ-mĭn), n. Pharm. A principle or mixture of principles derived from Evonymus (syn. Euonymus) atropurpureus, or spindle tree.

eu-ou'æ (ū-ōō'ē; ā/ōō-ō'wī), n. [A mnemonic from the vowels of "seculorum amen," ending the Gloria Patri.] Eccl. Music. The trope of the Gregorian Lesser Doxology, varying according to the mode used; also, any trope.

eu'pa-thy (ū'pȧ-thĭ), n.; pl. -THIES (-thĭz). [Gr. εὐπάθεια comfort, happy condition of the soul. See EU-; PATHETIC.] Right feeling; — referring to the Stoic doctrine that a just and temperate disposition is a proper ethical ideal.

Eu'pa-to'ri-um (ū'pȧ-tō'rĭ-ŭm; 201), n. [NL., fr. Gr. εὐπατόριον hemp agrimony, fr. Eupator, king of Pontus.] Bot. An immense genus of asteraceous herbs, chiefly tropical. They have heads of white or purplish flowers disposed in cymose clusters; the pappus is capillary and the achenes are 3-5-angled. Several American species, as E. maculatum, are common weeds. The hemp agrimony (E. cannabinum) and the boneset (E. perfoliatum) are used medicinally as tonics and diaphoretics. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

eu-pat'rid (ū-păt'rĭd; ū'pȧ-trĭd; 277), n. [Gr. εὐπατρίδης, fr. εὖ well + πατήρ father.] One of the eupatridæ. — eu'pa-trid, a.

eu-pat'ri-dæ (ū-păt'rĭ-dē), n. pl. [Gr. εὐπατρίδαι, pl. of εὐπατρίδης.] The hereditary aristocrats of ancient Athens and other states of Greece, who in early times exclusively made and administered the law.

eu-pep'si-a (-pĕp'sĭ-ȧ; -shȧ) } n. [NL. eupepsia, fr. Gr.
eu-pep'sy (ū-pĕp'sĭ; ū'pĕp-sĭ) } εὐπεψία. See EU-; DYSPEPSIA.] Med. Good digestion; — opposed to dyspepsia.

eu-pep'tic (ū-pĕp'tĭk), a. [Gr. εὐπεπτος.] Of, pertaining to, or having, good digestion; easy of digestion.

eu'phe-mism (ū'fē-mĭz'm), n. [Gr. εὐφημισμός, fr. εὐφημίζειν to use words of a good omen; εὖ well + φάναι to speak. See FAME.] Rhet. A figure in which an agreeable or nonoffensive word or expression is substituted for one that is harsh, indelicate, or otherwise unpleasant; a way of describing an offensive thing by an inoffensive expression; a mild name for something disagreeable, as, "passing away" for "dying." — eu'phe-mist (-mĭst), n.

eu'phe-mis'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } containing a euphemism; softened in expression. — eu'phe-mis'ti-cal-ly, adv.

eu'phe-mize (ū'fē-mīz), v. t. & i.; EU'PHE-MIZED (-mīzd); EU'PHE-MIZ'ING (-mīz'ĭng). [Gr. εὐφημίζειν.] To express by a euphemism; to make use of euphemistic expressions.

eu-pho'ne (ū-fō'nē), n. [Gr. εὔφωνος sweet-voiced. See EU-; -PHONE.] Music. A sixteen-foot free-reed organ stop, giving a sweet, softened tone of clarinetlike quality.

eu-phon'ic (ū-fŏn'ĭk) } a. [Cf. F. euphonique.] Of or per-eu-phon'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } taining to euphony; in accordance with the laws of euphony. — eu-phon'i-cal-ly, adv. — eu-phon'i-cal-ness, n.

eu-pho'ni-ous (ū-fō'nĭ-ŭs), a. Pleasing or sweet in sound; smooth-sounding. — eu-pho'ni-ous-ly, adv.

eu-pho'ni-um (-ŭm), n. [NL. See EUPHONY.] Music. a An instrument, invented by Chladni in 1790, consisting of glass tubes and graduated steel bars sounded by the moistened finger. b A small bass instrument of the saxhorn class, having a full, strong tone, and a compass of about three octaves up from C in the great octave (see PITCH).

eu'pho-ny (ū'fō-nĭ), n.; pl. -NIES (-nĭz). [L. euphonia, Gr. εὐφωνία, fr. εὔφωνος sweet-voiced; εὖ well + φωνή sound, voice; akin to φάναι to speak: cf. F. euphonie.] 1. A pleasing or sweet sound; the acoustic effect produced by words so combined and uttered as to please the ear.

2. Phon. Tendency to greater ease of pronunciation, resulting in various combinatory changes, due to increased speed of utterance or economy of effort rather than to a striving after a pleasing effect, as formerly supposed.

Eu-phor'bi-a (ū-fôr'bĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. L. euphorbea an African plant. See EUPHORBIUM.] Bot. An immense genus of herbs or shrubs of varied habit and wide distribution, having small monœcious flowers borne in involucres, sometimes with petaloid appendages, the whole structure resembling a single flower. The species in the United States are mostly insignificant weeds, though E. marginata and E. heterophylla are cultivated for ornament. The African species are usually succulent and often spiny shrubs resembling cacti, which they replace there. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Euphorbia. Cyathium, or Flower Cluster, of E. lathyris, showing drooping Pistillate Flower and several Staminate Flowers.

Eu-phor'bi-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See EUPHORBIA.] Bot. A large and important family of herbs, shrubs, or trees of uncertain systematic position, but usually referred to the order Geraniales. They have monœcious or dicecious flowers, 3-seeded capsules, and acrid or poisonous, often milky, juice. There are about 210 genera and 4,000 species, of wide distribution. Euphorbia is the type, and Phyllanthus, Croton, Acalypha, Ricinus, Jatropha, Hevea, and Manihot are among the other important genera. They include several medicinal plants, as those furnishing castor oil and croton oil; several trees yielding caoutchouc; the manioc or cassava plant, and various genera ornamental in cultivation. — eu-phor'bi-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

fr. Gr. Εὐγενία. See EUGENE.] Fem. of EUGENE. F. Eugénie (ö'zhā nē'; It. Eugenia (ā-ōō-jēn'yȧ); Sp. Eugenia (ā-ōō-hā'-nyȧ; 172); G. Eugenie (oi-gā'-nē-ē; oi'zhē-nē'), Eugenia (oi-gā'nē-ä). — DIM. Genie (jē'nĭ).

eu-gen'ic (ū-jĕn'ĭk), a. [See EUGENIA.] See EUGENOL.

Eu-ge'nie (ū-jē'nĭ), n. [F. Eugénie.] = EUGENIA, fem. prop. name.

eu'ge-ny (ū'jē-nĭ), n. [Gr. εὐγένεια, fr. εὐγενής well-born; εὖ well + γένος race.] Nobleness of birth. Obs.

eu-get'ic (ū-jĕt'ĭk), eu'ge-tin'ic (ū'jē-tĭn'ĭk), a. Designating an acid derived from eugenol.

eugh. † YEW.

Eu'gu-bine (ū'gū-bĭn), n. Of Eugubium. — Eugubine tables Seven bronze tablets inscribed in the Umbrian and Latin languages, discovered at Gubbio ancient Eugubium, Iguvium), Italy, in 1444, and still preserved there.

eu-kai'rite. Var. of EUCAIRITE.

eu'ki-ne'si-a (ū'kĭ-nē'sĭ-ȧ; ū'kī-), n. [NL., fr. Gr. εὐκινησία ease of motion.] Med. Normal power of movement.

eu'ko-lite, eu'ko-lyte. Vars. of EUCOLITE.

eu'la-chan, eu'la-chon (ū'lȧ-kŏn), n. [Native Indian name.] The candlefish.

eulachon oil. See OIL, Table II.

Eu-la'li-a (ū-lā'lĭ-ȧ), n. [L., fr. Gr. Εὐλαλία; cf. εὖ well, and λάλος talkative, λαλεῖν to speak.] Lit., fair speech; — fem. prop. name. F Eulalie (ö'lȧ'lē'); It. Eulalia (ā-ōō-lä'lē-ä). Saint Eulalia was a virgin martyred during the persecution of Diocletian. Her day is February 12.

Eu'la-mel'li-bran'chi-a (ū'lȧ-mĕl'ĭ-brăŋ'kĭ-ȧ), n. pl. [NL.; eu- + L. lamella a small plate of metal + -branchia.] Zoöl. An order of bivalve molluscs. They have gills with numerous vascular interfilamentary and interlamellar junctions so that they form basketlike lamellæ, the mantle edges united at one or more points, and two more or less equal adductor muscles It is much the largest order of the class. — eu'la-mel'li-branch (-brăŋk), a — Syn. Eu'la-mel'li-bran'chi-a'ta (-brăŋ'kĭ-ā'tȧ) eu'lo-ge. † EULOGY.

Euler's constant. = EULERIAN CONSTANT.

Eu-li'ma (ū-lī'mȧ), n. [NL.; eu- + Gr. λιμός hunger.] Zoöl. A genus of gymnoglossate gastropods with a slender spiral shell and long proboscis, parasitic on holothurians and other echinoderms It is the type of a family, Eu-lim'i-dæ (ū-lĭm'ĭ-dē).

eu-log'ic (ū-lŏj'ĭk), eu-log'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. Eulogistic. Rare. — eu-log'i-cal-ly, adv. Rare.

eu'lo-giz'er (-jīz'ẽr), n. A eulogist.

eu'ly-site (ū'lĭ-sīt), n. [Gr. εὐλυσία readiness in loosing.] Petrog. A rock consisting of a mixture of olivine with pyroxene and garnet.

Eu-mæ'us (ū-mē'ŭs), n. In Homer's "Odyssey," the faithful swineherd of Ulysses.

Eu'me-nes (ū'mē-nēz), n. a Bib. prop. name b See EUMENIDÆ.

eu'mer-ism (ū'mĕr-ĭz'm), n. [eu- + Gr. μέρος part.] Biol. An aggregation of like parts or units; result of eumerogenesis. —eu'mer-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a.

eu'mer-o-gen'e-sis (-ō-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [eu- + meiogenesis.] Biol. Merogenesis in which the units are at first similar to the primary unit, as in the segments of a tapeworm; — opposed to dysmerogenesis. — eu'mer-o-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a.

eu'mer-o-morph' (ū'mĕr-ō-môrf'), n. [eu- + mero- + -morph.] Biol. A eumerogenetic organism. — eu'mer-o-mor'phic (-môr'fĭk), a.

7. Any one of the contests in a series or program of sports.

Syn. — Incident, adventure; issue, result, termination, consequence, conclusion. — EVENT, OCCURRENCE, INCIDENT, CIRCUMSTANCE. OCCURRENCE is the general term for that which takes place; it implies no particular relation to other happenings; an EVENT (which is frequently regarded as arising from an antecedent state of things) is a more or less important or noteworthy occurrence; as, "Omit all the occurrences, whatever chanced, till Harry's back return" (Shak.); a tedious rehearsal of the occurrences of the day; "The course of human events" (The Declaration of Independence); "Southey had no events, no experiences" (Bagehot). An INCIDENT (cf. incidental, under ACCIDENTAL) is commonly an occurrence of subordinate character or secondary importance; but an incident is often thought of as a detached and independent event; as, the incidents of a journey, a mere incident in his career, the incident had better be forgotten. A CIRCUMSTANCE, as here compared, is esp. an incident or occurrence regarded as a detail; the word is often used as a synonym for event in its more general sense; as, certain curious circumstances in his history, an unforeseen circumstance intervened. See HAPPEN.

at all events, no matter what else may be; in any case.

e-vent'ful (ē-vĕnt'fo͝ol), a. Full of, or rich in, events; also, momentous. — e-vent'ful-ly, adv. — e-vent'ful-ness, n.

Faith is . . . the evidence of things not seen. Heb. xi. 1.

3. One who bears witness. Rare. "Infamous and perjured evidences." Scott.

4. Law. That which is legally submitted to a competent tribunal as a means of ascertaining the truth of any alleged matter of fact under investigation before it; means of making proof; medium of proof. Properly evidence is to be distinguished from proof, which is the effect of evidence, and from testimony, which is that form of evidence which is orally given. Evidence is often called direct evidence when, if it be true, it immediately establishes the fact to be proved by it; and indirect when it establishes immediately collateral facts from which the main fact may be inferred. See CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Syn. — EVIDENCE, TESTIMONY. In ordinary usage, EVIDENCE commonly implies more direct or immediate grounds for belief than TESTIMONY, which always suggests the affirmation or declaration of a witness (lit. or fig.); as, the evidence of one's senses; cf. the testimony of one's senses; to believe on the evidence of the facts themselves; to rely on the testimony of the historians. See PROOF.

be a true evolution; esp., such a development viewed as leading up to a definite end or result; as, the evolution of the tragedy of a drama. Cf. def. 8.

2. A thing or series of things evolved; as, the flower is the evolution of the bud.

The sensible world is but the evolution of truth, love, and life, or their opposites, in man. Coleridge.

3. Mil. & Nav. A prescribed movement of a body of troops, or of a vessel or fleet; any movement designed to effect a new arrangement by passing from one formation to another; a maneuver.

4. A movement forming one of a complicated series of motions; as, the evolutions of a machine; hence, an intricate form, as if produced by such a series; as, the evolutions of an arabesque pattern.

5. a Geom. (1) The formation of an involute, as by unwrapping a thread from a curve (the evolute). Hutton. (2) The gradual unbending into a straight line of a curve without stretching or breaking. Obs. b Arith. & Alg. The extraction of roots; — the inverse of involution.

6. A process of rolling out or disengaging, so as to expose or free; also, the product of such a process; as, the evolution of gas from limestone when treated with acid.

7. Biol. a Orig., the development of an organism; the gradual growth and unfolding of the parts and organs, as in the growth of a plant from a seed; hence, that theory of generation which supposes the germ to preëxist in the parent, and its parts to be developed, but not actually formed, by the procreative act; the theory of preformation; — opposed to epigenesis. Now Hist. b In modern usage, the development, not of an individual organism, but of a race, species, or other group; phylogeny; in general, the history of the steps by which any living organism or group of organisms has acquired the morphological and physiological characters which distinguish it; hence, the theory that the various types of animals and plants have developed by descent with modification from other preëxisting types, as opposed to the old theory of the separate creation of each species. This theory, which involves also the descent of man from the lower animals, is based on facts abundantly disclosed by every branch of biological study, esp. by paleontology (which see), embryology (see ONTOGENY), comparative anatomy, experiments in hybridization, etc. In general, the progress of evolution has been from the simpler toward the more highly organized and specialized types, though many examples of retrograde evolution, degeneration, or reversion to a simpler type occur (see ASCIDIAN). The indications are that all animals and plants are the descendants of a very few simple organisms (or perhaps of but one) not very unlike some of the simplest existing protozoans. The various living and extinct types do not form a single series, but a genealogical tree whose branches exhibit very different degrees of divergence from the parent stock. Many branches have died out completely, and are known only by fossils. Close resemblance between two forms, as between man and the anthropoid apes, does not necessarily, therefore, indicate descent of one from the other, though it does furnish good evidence of origin from common ancestors at a comparatively recent date. The fundamental idea of the theory of evolution is an old one. Lamarck (see LAMARCKISM) was the first prominent modern zoologist to adopt and formulate it. Its general acceptance, however, was largely brought about by its clear exposition and demonstration by Darwin (see DARWINISM). Modern theories of evolution differ only in regard to the various factors influencing it, their relative importance, and the ways in which they act. See WEISMANNISM, HEREDITY, VARIATION, NATURAL SELECTION, MUTATION.

8. Metaph. A systematic development (the processes of which may be formulated as natural laws, whether physical or psychical) by which the known universe has come to be what it is; also, the theory of such development; often, specif., Spencer's evolutional theory. Cf. SPENCERIANISM.

On the one side, then, the doctrine of evolution is to be sharply distinguished from the naturalism of the seventeenth century. Unlike that naturalism, our modern doctrine is primarily disposed, not merely to explain, but to estimate nature. Josiah Royce.

He [Spencer] finds that throughout the universe there is an unceasing redistribution of matter and motion, and that this redistribution constitutes evolution when there is a predominant integration of matter and dissipation of motion, and constitutes dissolution where there is a predominant absorption of motion and disintegration of matter. Encyc. Brit.

Syn. — See DEVELOPMENT.

ev'o-lu'tion-al (ĕv'ō-lū'shŭn-ăl), a. Of, pertaining to, or produced by, evolution. — ev'o-lu'tion-al-ly, adv.

ex (ĕks), prep. [L.] Out; out of; from; without; — used in commercial phrases, as . a Finance. Without the right to have (any dividend, bonus, or other advantage that has been declared on, or annexed to, the stock), as, ex dividend, ex coupon, or, as excluding all benefits, ex all. b Com. Free out of, that is, free of charges until taken out of the vessel or other place referred to; as, ex ship, or free overside, ex store, etc.

ex drawing, lit., without the drawing; — used in England to denote that the terms under which a bond is sold are not to be varied by its being drawn for redemption. Eng. — ex elevator, out of the elevator; subject to no charge incurred before leaving the elevator; — said of grain. — ex interest, without due or accruing interest. — ex new, Finance, without the right to claim participation in an issue of new stock. Eng. — ex ship. = FREE OVERSIDE. — ex steamer. = FREE OVERSIDE. — ex store, Com., from store or stock, the buyer to pay shipping expenses. — ex warehouse, Com., from the warehouse, subject to charges for removal.

ex-, prefix. 1. (for pron. see 2d note below) [L. ex out of, from; akin to Gr. ἐξ or ἐκ.] A prefix denoting: a Out of, as in exhale, exclude. b Off, from, as in exsind. c Beyond, as in excess, exceed, excel. d Away from, out of, as in expatriate, exonerate. e Without, as in exsanguineous, exalbuminous. f Thoroughly, completely, as in excruciate, exasperate, exacerbate. g As prefixed to names (to which it is joined by a hyphen) implying office or condition (following a Late Latin usage), that the person is now out of that office or condition; as, ex-president, ex-convict, ex-mayor.

☞ ex- regularly appears as e- before b, d, g, j, l, m, n, v, and v; as ef- before f in effuse. In words from the French it often appears as es-, sometimes as s- or é-; as escape, scape, élute; sometimes the Latin ex has been restored; as, *ex*change. In cheat no trace of the original L. ex- (F. es-) is left.

☞ Under accent (stress), either primary or secondary, ex- is pronounced ĕks-; also unaccented before a consonant other than silent h, as in exclaim'; when unaccented and preceding an accented (stressed) vowel, the usual pronunciation is ĕgz-, as in ex-am'ine, ex-ude'; but exceptions to this latter rule occur, mostly in rare words and those influenced by cognates with different accentuation.

2. (ĕks-) [Gr. ἐξ out of; see def. 1 above.] Prefix in words from Greek, meaning out of; as, exarch, exodus, exorcise.

ex-ac'er-bate (ĕg-zăs'ĕr-bāt; 277), v. t.; EX-AC'ER-BAT'ED (-bāt'ĕd); EX-AC'ER-BAT'ING (-bāt'Ing) [L. exacerbatus, p. p. of exacerbare; ex out (intens.) + acerbare to irritate.] To render more violent or bitter; to irritate; exasperate.

ex-ac'er-ba'tion (-bā'shŭn), n. [L. exacerbatio.] Act of exacerbating, or state of being exacerbated; specif., Med. increase of violence in a disease, as in a continuous fever.

ex-act' (ĕg-zăkt'), a. [L. exactus precise, accurate, p. p. of exigere to drive out, to demand, enforce, finish, determine, measure; ex out + agere to drive: cf. F. exact. See AGENT, ACT.] 1. Suffering or exhibiting no departure from the letter or standard; undeviating, strict, rigorous; as, exact laws. "An exact command." Shak.

2. That which is to be followed or imitated; a pattern.

For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. John xiii 15

3. That which resembles or corresponds with something else as a precedent, a model, or a parallel case.

Such temperate order in so fierce a cause Doth want example. Shak.

4. A warning case, esp. a punishment inflicted to serve as a warning. "Hang him, he 'll be made an example." Shak.

5. An instance serving to illustrate a rule or precept, esp. a problem to be solved, or a case to be determined, as an exercise in the application of the rules of any study or branch of science, as, in algebra and grammar, principles and rules are illustrated by examples.

Syn. — Illustration, exemplification, case. — EXAMPLE, SAMPLE, SPECIMEN, INSTANCE. AN EXAMPLE, as here compared (see PATTERN), is a typical, representative, or illustrative case; a SAMPLE (see etym.) is a part of a thing itself, designed to show the quality of the whole; as, "If I were asked to define what this gentlemanliness is, I should say that it is only to be defined by examples" (Byron); "The man you mention applied for samples of my translation. When I deal in wine, cloth, or cheese, I will give samples, but of verse never" (Cowper). A SPECIMEN is commonly representative of a class of things rather than of an individual object; but sample and specimen are often used without distinction; as, a collection of geological, botanical specimens; "The subjects being so various, no single passage can in all respects be a specimen of the book at large" (Cowper). INSTANCE applies only to illustrative facts, cases, or occurrences, never to objects as such; an instance is more individual, less representative, than an example; as, an instance (a case in point; cf. an example, a typical case) of the prevailing excitement; cf. for instance, for example. Cf. DUPLICATE.

ex-am'ple, v. t. To serve as, or cite, an example. Rare.

Ex-cal'i-bur (ĕks-kăl'ĭ-bŭr), Ex-cal'i-bar (-bär), n. [OF. Escalibor, of Celtic origin; cf. LL. Caliburnus, W. Caledvwlch, also Ir. Caladbolg, name of an Irish hero's sword.] The name of, apparently, two famous swords of King Arthur's. One he unfixed from a miraculous stone after all others who tried had failed, thus proving himself the man who was to be king. The other and better known he received from the Lady of the Lake's hand, which appeared above the surface of the water holding the sword. When about to die he sent Sir Bedivere to throw the weapon into the lake. A hand and arm arose from the water, caught the sword by the hilt, flourished it thrice, and then sank into the lake, and was seen no more.

ex-cept', v. i. To take exception; to object; — usually followed by to, sometimes by against; as, to except to a witness or his testimony.

Except thou wilt except against my love. Shak.

ex-cept', prep. [Originally past participle. See EXCEPT, v.] With exclusion of; leaving or left out; excepting.

God and his Son except,
Created thing naught valued he nor . . . shunned. Milton.

Syn. — EXCEPT, EXCEPTING, BUT, SAVE, BESIDES. EXCEPT (less frequently EXCEPTING) marks exclusion more pointedly than BUT (see BUT); SAVE is chiefly poetical; BESIDES, as here compared (see BESIDES), occurs chiefly in negative phrases, and is equivalent to "other than;" as, I have finished all the letters except one (or, more casually, but one); "All are fled, save only the gods" (Shak.); there will be no one there besides (in addition to) ourselves.

ex-cept', conj. Unless; if it be not so that.

And he said, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me. Gen xxxii. 26.

But yesterday you never opened lip,

No one was ever yet made utterly miserable excepting by himself. Lubbock.

Syn. — See EXCEPT.

ex-cep'tion (ĕk-sĕp'shŭn), n. [L. exceptio: cf. F. exception.] 1. Act of excepting, or excluding, exclusion, restriction by taking out something which would otherwise be included, as in a class, statement, or rule.

2. That which is excepted, or taken out, from others; a person, thing, or case specified as distinct, or not included; as, almost every general rule has its exceptions.

That proud exception to all nature's laws Pope

3. Pleading. a Rom. Law. A form of equitable plea in defense answering to the special plea in bar of English law, but so formed as to state that judgment should be rendered only upon the condition that the matters which are mentioned by way of avoidance are found not to exist or not to be true. Hence: b Civil Law. A special plea in bar. c Scots Law. = DEFENSE. d Equity Pleading. An objection alleging insufficiency of some pleading or proceeding.

4. Law. a An objection, oral or written, taken, in the course of an action or proceeding, as to bail, to the decision or a ruling of a judge, or to something in his charge to a jury. b In conveyancing, a clause by which the grantor excepts something out of what he before granted.

5. Objection; something offered as objection or as a ground of objection, or taken as objectional; hence, cavil; dissent; offense; complaint; as, to be beyond exception; to take exception to misconduct.

He . . . took exception to the place of their burial. Bacon

ex-cep'tion-a-ble (-ă-b'l), a. Liable to exception. — ex-cep'tion-a-ble-ness, n. — ex-cep'tion-a-bly, adv.

Syn. — See EXCEPTIONAL.

ex-cep'tion-al (-ăl), a. [Cf. F. exceptionnel.] Forming an exception; not ordinary; uncommon; rare; hence, better than the average; superior.

This particular spot had exceptional advantages. Jowett (Th.)

Syn. — EXCEPTIONAL, EXCEPTIONABLE are frequently confused. That is EXCEPTIONAL which is itself an exception, and so is out of the ordinary; that is EXCEPTIONABLE (cf. the commoner unexceptionable) to which exception may be taken, and which is therefore objectionable; as, an exceptional opportunity, exceptionable conduct.

— ex-cep'tion-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), ex-cep'tion-al-ness, n. — ex-cep'tion-al-ly, adv.

ex-cep'tious (-shŭs), a. Disposed to take exceptions; captious. Obs. or R. — ex-cep'tious-ness, n. Obs. or R.

ex-cep'tive (-tĭv), a. 1. Pertaining to, containing, or constituting, exception; as, "None but the brave deserves the fair" is an exceptive proposition.

2. Prone to take exception; captious; as, an exceptive man.

ex-cerpt' (ĕk-sûrpt'), v. t.; EX-CERPT'ED; EX-CERPT'ING. [From L. excerptus, p. p. of excerpere; ex out + carpere to pick, gather. See HARVEST; cf. SCARCE, a.] 1. To select, as a literary passage; to extract; cite; quote.

Out of which we have excerpted the following particulars. Fuller.

2. To take out; to remove Obs.

ex'cerpt (ĕk'sûrpt; ĕk-sûrpt'; 277), n. 1. An extract; a passage selected or copied from a book or record.

2. A thing taken out; a choice. Rare.

Syn. — See EXTRACT.

‖ ex-cerp'ta (ĕk-sûrp'tă), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of excerptus selected, p. p.] Passages extracted; excerpts; clippings.

ex-cerpt'i-ble (ĕk-sûrp'tĭ-b'l), a. That may be excerpted, or from which excerpts may be taken.

ex-cerp'tion (-shŭn), n. [L. excerptio.] Act of excerpting, or selecting, also, that which is selected; an extract.

ex-cerp'tive (-tĭv), a. That excerpts. or selects.

ex-cess' (ĕk-sĕs'), n. [F. excès, fr. L. excessus a going out, loss of self-possession, fr. excedere, excessum, to go out, go beyond. See EXCEED.] 1. Act of going out or beyond; specif., of Parliament, adjournment. Obs.

2. State of surpassing or going beyond limits; the fact of being in a measure beyond sufficiency, necessity, or duty; that which exceeds what is usual or proper; immoderateness; superfluity; superabundance; extravagance; as, an excess of provisions or of light.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet, . . .
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shak.

That kills me with excess of grief, this with excess of joy. Walsh

3. Undue or immoderate indulgence in anything; esp., undue gratification of carnal appetites; intemperance.

Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess. Eph. v. 18.

4. The amount or degree by which one thing or number exceeds another; remainder; as, the difference between two numbers is the excess of one over the other.

Syn. — Extravagance, superabundance, exuberance. — EXCESS, SUPERFLUITY, REDUNDANCY. EXCESS is that which passes limits; it usually (but not always) conveys a derogatory implication; as, "In measure rein thy joy; scant this excess" (Shak.); "the proper point between sufficiency and excess" (H. James). "I think poetry should surprise by a fine excess" (Keats). SUPERFLUITY is more than is needed or desired; REDUNDANCY, as here compared (see REDUNDANCY), is superabundance without necessary implication (as commonly in the case of superfluity) of waste or uselessness; as, "Her superfluity the poor supplies" (Cowper); "the inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity, and another for use" (Shak.); "the antagonism between the tropical redundancy of life in summer and the dark sterility of the grave" (De Quincey). See PROFUSE, EXCESSIVE.

2. More than or above the usual or specified amount; that constitutes an excess; as, excess baggage on a railroad, i. e., baggage in excess of the amount carried free.

ex-cess' (ĕk-sĕs'), v. t. To pay excess charges on, as luggage. Eng.

excess function. Math. In the calculus of variations, a certain change in the value of an integral along a stationary curve AP due to passing over to an integration between corresponding points on a neighboring curve AP'. It must be always positive (or always negative) for every point P of the curve and every admissible direction PP', if the integral is to be a minimum (or maximum).

ex-ces'sive (ĕk-sĕs'ĭv), a. [F. excessif] Characterized by, or exhibiting, excess; as: a Exceeding what is usual or proper; overmuch. b Greater than the usual amount or degree; exceptional; very great.

Excessive grief [is] the enemy to the living. Shak.

Cold masses of protyle or primal matter were moving through space in all directions with excessive velocities. James Ward.

Syn. — Extreme, intemperate, unreasonable. — EXCESSIVE, EXORBITANT, INORDINATE, EXTRAVAGANT, IMMODERATE. EXCESSIVE is the general term for what goes beyond just measure or amount; as, "Excessive lenity and indulgence are ultimately excessive rigor" (Knox). EXORBITANT applies to that (esp. price, charges, etc.) which is grossly excessive; INORDINATE (see etym.) frequently retains the implication of that which exceeds prescribed rules or limits; as, "The legislature . . . imposed an exorbitant security for their appearance" (Gibbon), "a resolution to contract none of the exorbitant desires by which others are enslaved" (Spectator); "inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness" (Col. iii. 5); "The great difficulty of living content is the cherishing of inordinate and unreasonable expectations" (T. E. Brown). That is EXTRAVAGANT (see etym.) which passes the bounds of use or propriety, or which is prodigal in expenditure; as, extravagant praise; "She was rapacious of money, extravagant to excess" (Fielding). IMMODERATE frequently implies lack of restraint, esp. in the feelings or their expression; as, immoderate zeal, immoderate laughter. See EXCESS, PROFUSE, REDUNDANCY, FLAGRANT.

ex-change' (ĕks-chānj'), n. [ME eschange, eschaunge, OF. exchange, fr. eschanger, F. échanger, to exchange; es- (L. ex out) + F. changer. See CHANGE; cf. EXCAMB.] 1. Act of giving or taking one thing in return for another regarded as an equivalent. Specif.: a Mutual giving and receiving of commodities without the intervention of money; barter. b Econ. Formerly, the process of interchange involved in the carrying on of commerce; the phenomena of commerce, collectively. Now, in a restricted sense, the phase representing the actual transfer of goods in the economic process of the joint production of goods and the distribution to the different factors concerned of their respective shares. See DISTRIBUTION, VALUE, PRICE, MONEY. c Law. A mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. Estates exchanged must be equal in quantity, as fee simple for fee simple (Blackstone). To constitute an exchange the word exchange itself must be used; but this method of conveyancing is nearly obsolete. d Chess. A mutual capture of pawns or pieces. A player is said to win or lose the exchange when the difference is clear, as in the exchange of a bishop for a rook.

2. Com. a The process of settling accounts or debts between parties residing at a distance from each other, without the intervention of money, by exchanging orders or drafts, called bills of exchange; the payment of debts in different places by an exchange or transfer of credits. A simple form of the process is thus: A in London is owed a certain sum by B in New York, and C in London owes D in New York a like sum. A in London draws a bill of exchange, or draft, on B in New York; C in London purchases the bill from A, who thus receives payment of his debt due from B in New York. C transmits the bill to D in New York (usually in duplicate, sometimes in triplicate, copies, called first of exchange, second of exchange, third of exchange), and D receives the amount from B. See BILL OF EXCHANGE, DRAFT. b A bill of exchange. c The amount paid for the collection of a draft, bill of exchange, check, etc., drawn in one place upon another. d (1) Interchange or conversion of the money of two countries, or of current and uncurrent money, with allowance for difference in value. (2) Short for rate, or course, of exchange, that is, the price or sum per unit at which the currency of one country is exchanged for currency of another country, or uncurrent money for current money. (3) The amount of the difference in value between two currencies, or between values at two places. Cf. ARBITRATION OF EXCHANGE. e pl. In a clearing house, the items (drafts, checks, etc.) which are presented for settlement by mutual interchange of credits and debits and payment of balances.

3. Act of substituting one thing in the place of another; as, an exchange of grief for joy, or of a scepter for a sword, and the like; also, act of giving and receiving or losing and taking reciprocally; as, an exchange of civilities or views; exchange of prisoners in war.

4. The thing given or received in return; esp., a publication exchanged for another.

5. A place where things or services are exchanged; specif.: a A money changer's place of business. Obs. b The place where merchants, brokers, bankers, or other business men meet to do business; — often, in England, shortened to 'change.

In commerce an exchange is defined to be a place where business interests of a special character are brought together, and where contracts concerning them are made, as the stock exchange, the cotton exchange, or the produce exchange

c A headquarters or central office or place of business (of a designated sort); as, a telephone exchange, where the wires converge and connections are made for customers. d A barroom; a drinking saloon; — chiefly used in the proper names of such places of business. Cant, U. S.

Syn. — Barter, dealing, trade, traffic, interchange.

CHANG'ING (-chān'jĭng). [Cf. OF. eschangier, F. échanger. See EXCHANGE, n.] 1. To part with, give, or transfer to another in consideration of something received as an equivalent; — usually followed by for before the thing received.

Exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble or a diamond. Locke.

2. To part with for a substitute, to lay aside, quit, or resign (something being received in place of the thing parted with); as, to exchange a palace for a cell.

And death for life exchanged foolishly. Spenser.

3. To give and receive or lose and take reciprocally, as things of the same kind; to barter; swap; as, to exchange horses; to exchange hats; to exchange prisoners.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet. Shak.

4. To alternate. Rare.

West Indian cedar . . . exchanged with black oak. Scott.

5. To change; transmute. Obs.

Syn. — EXCHANGE, INTERCHANGE. INTERCHANGE, as compared with EXCHANGE, emphasizes more strongly the mutual or reciprocal nature of the transaction, and accordingly applies more frequently to immaterial things; as, to exchange horses, to interchange courtesies; "laurels . . . ill exchanged for gold" (Pope); "the communion of interchanged vows" (Shelley). Cf. CHANGE, v. t.

ex-change' (ĕks-chānj'), v. i. To make an exchange, or to pass or be received in exchange.

ex-change'a-ble (ĕks-chānj'ă-b'l), a. 1. Capable of being exchanged; fit or proper to be exchanged.

The officers captured with Burgoyne were exchangeable within the powers of General Howe. Marshall.

2. A money changer; a banker. Now Hist.

ex-cheq'uer (ĕks-chĕk'ẽr), n. [ME. escheker, prop., a chessboard, OF. eschelier, eschequier; cf. LL. scaccarium. See CHECKER.] 1. A chessboard, also, chess; as, to play at the exchequer. Obs.

2. [cap.] In England under the Norman and Plantagenet kings, a department or office of state charged with the collection and management of the royal revenue and the judicial determination of all revenue causes.

Under Henry I. something that is more like a permanent tribunal, a group of justiciars presided over by a chief justiciar, becomes apparent. Twice a year this group, taking the name of "the exchequer," sat around the checkered table, received the royal revenue, audited the sheriffs' accounts, and did incidental justice. Pollock & Mait.

3. [cap.] Eng. Hist. Short for Court of Exchequer or less commonly Exchequer of Pleas, a court arising from the Exchequer Office (see def. 2), recognized as a distinct court as early as the reign of Henry III. Its jurisdiction originally was theoretically only in revenue matters, but was extended (on the fiction that the wrong to the plaintiff made him unable to pay his debts to the crown) to a concurrent jurisdiction with the other courts of common law and also an equity jurisdiction, abolished in 1841. The judges of this court were one chief and four puisne barons, so styled. By the Judicature Act of 1873 it became the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice, and later it was merged in the King's (Queen's) Bench Division. The Court of Exchequer Chamber was a court of appeal, established in the reign of Edward III., composed of the judges of the three courts. It was abolished in 1875.

4. [often cap.] In modern times in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the department or office of state charged with the receipt and custody of the national revenue; hence, the national banking account or purse.

Careful distinction must be drawn between the exchequer and the treasury. The exchequer is the national purse, the treasury is the finance department of the state, which controls the exchequer on behalf of the executive government, subject to the check and audit of the comptroller and auditor-general acting on behalf of Parliament. Dict. of Pol. Econ.

5. By extension, a treasury, lit. or fig.; esp., a national or royal treasury.

6. Pecuniary possessions or resources; purse; finances.

Exchequer of the Jews, Eng. Hist, in the 13th century, a department of the royal exchequer charged with the supervision of all business with the Jews. It was both a financial bureau and a judicial tribunal with jurisdiction in transactions of the crown with the Jews.

ex-cheq'uer (ĕks-chĕk'ẽr), v. t.; -UERED (-ẽrd); -UER-ING. 1. To keep in or as in an exchequer, or treasury. Obs.

2. To proceed against in the Court of Exchequer.

exchequer bill. In England, a short-time bill of credit, or promissory note, issued by governmental authority and bearing interest. They have been superseded by treasury bills, issued by the Bank of England under treasury warrant and sold at a discount and bearing no interest.

exchequer bond. An English government bond constituting part of the unfunded debt. The exchequer bonds are more permanent than the exchequer bills, or treasury bills, and bear interest.

ex-cide' (ĕk-sīd'), v. t.; EX-CID'ED (-sīd'ĕd); EX-CID'ING (-sīd'ĭng). [L. excidere, excisum; ex out + caedere to cut. Cf. CONCISE, EXCISE to cut off.] To cut out; to excise.

ex-cip'i-ent (ĕk-sĭp'ĭ-ĕnt), a. [L. excipiens, -entis, p. pr. of excipere. See EXCEPT, v. t.] Taking exception.

ex-cip'i-ent, n. 1. One that receives, as a ground for painting.

2. Pharm. An inert substance used in preparing remedies in order to give them a suitable form or consistency.

ex-cir'cle (ĕks-sẽr'k'l), n. [See EX-; CIRCLE.] Math. An escribed circle.

ex-cise' (ĕk-sīz'), n. [Prob. under the influence of L. ex-cidere, excisum, to cut out or off, fr. an OF. word; cf. OF. assis tax, assise imposition of a tax, tax (see ASSIZE); perh. through an OD. form; cf. D. accijns, OD. excijs.]

1. Any duty, toll, or tax. Obs., except specif.:

2. An inland duty or impost levied upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities within the country. Also, a tax upon the pursuit or following of certain sports, trades, or occupations, usually taking in this case the form of exactions for licenses. Originally the term excise was used only of the tax on commodities (which is generally an indirect tax, of which the burden falls on the consumer), but it later came to be applied to duties or fees levied upon makers of, or dealers in, excisable commodities, and finally to various taxes levied for permission to practice or conduct certain sports, trades, occupations, etc. In Great Britain the term in its latest extension includes a great variety of taxes imposed by the Board of Inland Revenue, including those formerly called assessed taxes (which see). In the United States the usual excise is a tax on the inland manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities or for licenses to follow certain occupations, and these taxes are usually known as internal revenue taxes.

Excise or internal revenue charges, when fixed at small amounts, are often hardly distinguishable from fees. When they are large in amount, they constitute a tax on the consumers of the article, so obvious as to be quite unpopular. A. T. Hadley

3. That department or bureau of the public service charged with the collection of the excise taxes, now merged in the Department of Inland Revenue. Eng.

ex-cise' (ĕk-sīz'), v. t.; EX-CISED' (-sīzd'); EX-CIS'ING (-sīz'ĭng). 1. To lay or impose an excise upon.

2. To impose upon; to overcharge. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

ex-cise', v. t. [See EXCIDE.] 1. To circumcise. Obs.

2. To cut out or off; as, to excise a tumor.

3. To make an excision in; to hollow out.

ex-ci'sion (ĕk-sĭzh'ŭn), n. [L. excisio: cf. F. excision. See EXCIDE.] Act or operation of excising, or cutting out or off; hence, extirpation; destruction; erasure; specif., Eccl., expulsion from the church; excommunication ex-cit'a-bil'i-ty (ĕk-sīt'ă-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz).

1. Quality of being readily excitable.

2. Physiol. The property manifested by living organisms, or their organs or tissues, of responding to the action of stimulants; irritability; as, nervous excitability.

ex-cit'a-ble (ĕk-sīt'ă-b'l), a. [Cf. F. excitable, L. excitabilis inciting.] Capable of being excited, or roused into action, susceptible of excitement or stimulation; easily stirred up or stimulated. — ex-cit'a-ble-ness, n.

ex-cit'ant (ĕk-sīt'ănt), a. [L. excitans, -antis, p. pr. of excitare cf. F. excitant.] Tending to excite; exciting.

ex-cit'ant, n. Something that excites; specif.: a Physiol. Any agent that arouses or augments organic activity; a stimulant. b Elec. The exciting liquid in a voltaic cell.

ex'ci-ta'tion (ĕk'sĭ-tā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. excitation, L. excitatio.] Act of exciting, or state of being excited, or aroused; excitement; specif.: a Physiol. Act of producing excitement (stimulation); also, the excitement produced. b Elec Electric energizing; production of a magnetic field in a dynamo or the like. See EXCITE.

ex-cit'a-tive (ĕk-sīt'ă-tĭv), a. [Cf. F. excitatif.] Having power to excite; tending or serving to excite.

ex-cit'a-to-ry (-tō-rĭ), a. Tending to excite; containing, or marked by, excitement; excitative.

ex-cite' (ĕk-sīt'), v. t.; EX-CIT'ED (-sīt'ĕd); EX-CIT'ING (-sīt'ĭng). [L. excitare; ex out + citare to move rapidly, to rouse: cf. OF. exciter, exciter, F. exciter. See CITE.]

1. To call to activity in any way; to rouse to feeling; to kindle to passionate emotion; to stir up to combined or general activity, as, to excite a person, the passions; to excite a mutiny; to excite heat by friction.

2. Physiol. To call forth or increase the vital activity of, as an organism or any of its parts; to stimulate.

3. Elec. To energize (an electromagnet), to produce a magnetic field in; as, to excite a dynamo. A dynamo may be excited by a separate machine (exciter), or by a portion of the electricity which it itself produces. To render a dynamo self-exciting, various methods of winding are employed (series winding, shunt winding, compound winding).

Syn. — Awaken, arouse, stimulate, animate, kindle, inflame, provoke, impel, prompt, urge, spur, instigate. — EXCITE, INCITE; STIR, PIQUE. To EXCITE is to rouse to activity, esp. of feeling; to INCITE is to urge or spur on to a specific act or end; as, Demosthenes, by exciting the passions of the Athenians against Philip, incited the nation to war; to excite interest, to incite to renewed effort. To STIR (see STIR) is to quicken or arouse; as, "Inanimate things cannot stir our affections" (J. H. Newman); "Not . . . Nepenthes . . . is of such power to stir up joy" (Milton). To PIQUE (see PIQUE) is to excite by stimulating or provoking; as, "a secret to pique curiosity" (G. Eliot); "Even the cabs are rimmed with a halo, and people across the way have all that possibility of suggestion which piques the fancy so in the figures of fading frescoes" (Lowell). See MOVE, KINDLE, INVITE.

ex-cite'ment (-mĕnt), n. 1. Act of exciting, or state of being excited; agitation; as, an excitement of the people; specif., Physiol., aroused, augmented, or abnormal activity of an organism or functioning of an organ.

2. That which excites or rouses. Also, Obs. or R., that which induces action, a motive.

The cares and excitements of a season of transition. Talfourd.

ex-cit'er (ĕk-sīt'ẽr), n. One that excites; specif.: Elec. a A small auxiliary dynamo or other source of electricity used to excite the field magnets of some dynamos. b A device for producing jump sparks to excite electric waves of definite and determinable wave length.

ex-cit'ing (ĕk-sīt'ĭng), p. a. Calling or rousing into action; producing excitement; as, exciting events; an exciting story. — ex-cit'ing-ly, adv.

L. pl. of excretum, p. p. of excernere to separate.] a Physiol. Waste matter eliminated from the body; excretions; —sometimes including also fecal matter. b Plant Physiol. Useless or deleterious substances formed within a plant body by constructive katabolic processes. —ex-cre'tal (-tăl), a.

ex-crete' (ĕks-krēt'), v. t.; EX-CRET'ED (-krēt'ĕd), EX-CRET'ING (-krēt'ĭng). [L. excretus, p. p. of excernere to sift out, discharge; ex out + cernere to sift, separate. See CERTAIN.] a Physiol. To separate and eliminate or discharge (waste, superfluous, or harmful material) from the blood or tissues of the body (see EXCRETION; cf. SECRETION). b Plant Physiol. To separate or withdraw (useless substances) from the active tissues; to eliminate by katabolism.

ex-cre'tion (-krē'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. excrétion.] Physiol. 1. Act or process of excreting; elimination of waste products from the body of an organism.

2. That which is excreted; useless, superfluous, or harmful material (as the waste products of metabolism) eliminated from the body, generally by the activity of special cells or organs. The chief excretions of the human body are urine and sweat (and in a broad sense of the word also the carbon dioxide eliminated in respiration). Though some matter excreted from the walls of the alimentary canal and its glands is contained in the feces, or excrements, these are not classed as excretions, as they consist primarily of matter merely swallowed but never absorbed into the tissues. An excretion is a form of secretion, but differs from an ordinary secretion in not being produced to perform a useful function. In plants the excretions, except when gaseous, cannot be easily cast off as from the body of an animal, and they are therefore either stored in nonfunctional tissue, as bark, or deposited in leaves about to be shed. The nectar of flowers, incrustations of mineral salts, and the products of respiration (water and carbon dioxide) are examples of excretions. Cf. SECRETION.

ex'cre-to-ry (ĕks'krē-tō-rĭ ; ĕks-krē'tō-rĭ ; 277), a. [Cf. F. excrétoire.] Pertaining to, or serving for, excretion. —n. An excretory organ.

ex-cru'ci-ate (ĕks-krōō'shĭ-āt), a. [L. excruciatus, p. p. of excruciare to excruciate; ex out + cruciare to crucify. See CRUCIATE, CROSS.] Excruciated; excruciating. Obs.

ex-cru'ci-ate (-āt), v. t.; -AT'ED (-āt'ĕd) , -AT'ING (-āt'ĭng). To inflict agonizing pain upon; to torture, to torment greatly; to rack; as, to excruciate the heart or the body.

ex-cul'pa-ble (ĕks-kŭl'pȧ-b'l), a. Capable of being exculpated; deserving exculpation.

ex-cul'pate (ĕks-kŭl'pāt ; ĕks'kŭl-pāt ; 277), v. t.; EX-CUL'PAT-ED (-pāt-ĕd; -pāt'ĕd); EX-CUL'PAT-ING (-ĭng). [L ex out + culpatus, p. p. of culpare to find fault with, to blame, culpa fault. See CULPABLE.] 1. To clear from alleged fault or guilt; to prove to be guiltless; to relieve of blame; as, the grand jury exculpated him from the charge.

2. To justify, as conduct. Obs.

Syn. —Release, set free, discharge, remit, clear; excuse, pardon, forgive; vindicate, justify.—EXCULPATE, ABSOLVE, EXONERATE, ACQUIT agree in the idea of freeing from a charge or burden. EXCULPATE denotes simply a clearing from blame; as, to exculpate one's self from a charge of inconsistency. ABSOLVE implies a setting free either from obligations or responsibilities that bind the conscience, or from the consequences or penalties of their violation; as, to absolve from allegiance, from an oath, to absolve from blame. EXONERATE denotes relief, in a moral sense, from what is regarded as a load or burden; as, to exonerate from suspicion, from a charge of falsehood. ACQUIT implies a decision in one's favor, either by a jury or by disinterested persons, with reference to a specific charge or accusation; as, to acquit of all participation in a crime. See EXCUSE, VINDICATE; cf. PALLIATE.

If I choose to make a defense of myself on the little principles of a culprit, pleading in his exculpation, I might . . . secure my acquittal. Burke

5. To seek or obtain exemption or release for or from, as, to excuse one's self from attendance, also, Obs, to serve as a means of exemption; to serve as a substitute for.

Be in readiness to go:
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory. Shak.

6. To grant exemption or release to or from; to free from an obligation or duty; to remit by favor; not to exact; as, to excuse a fine; to excuse a juror from attendance.

I pray thee have me excused. Luke xiv. 19.

Syn. —Exculpate, exonerate, absolve, acquit. — EXCUSE, PARDON, FORGIVE, CONDONE. One EXCUSES (either as a superior or as an equal) small faults, minor omissions, or neglects, esp. in social or conventional obligations; one PARDONS (as a superior, or by an act of mercy or generosity) serious faults, crimes, or grave offenses, esp. against law or morals; as, to excuse an unintentional oversight, an absence from a required exercise; "Excuse my glove" (Sheridan); to pardon a thief, to pardon a theft; "Apollo, pardon my great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle" (Shak.); cf. inexcusable carelessness, an unpardonable insult. Pardon is often used as a conventional term of courtesy for excuse; as, Pardon my interruption. FORGIVE applies to offenses against one's self, and emphasizes more strongly than pardon (the legal term) the element of personal feeling, frequently with the implication that resentment is extinguished or alienated affection restored; as, "If thy brother trespass against thee . . . and if he repent, forgive him" (Luke xvii. 3); "The wrath . . . is past . . . and I, lo, I forgive thee, as Eternal God forgives!" (Tennyson). To CONDONE is to forgive tacitly or by implication, or to overlook; as, "We condone everything in this country — private treason, falsehood, flattery, cruelty at home, roguery, and double-dealing" (Thackeray); "Punishment coming . . . years after memory has forgotten and self-love condoned the fault" (Stevenson); to condone a falsehood. See EXCULPATE, APOLOGY, VENIAL.

ex-ec'u-tive (ĕg-zĕk'ū-tĭv; ĕk-sĕk'- ; 277), a. [Cf. F. exécutif.] 1. Effectual, active, or skillful in execution; as, an admirably executive leader. Chiefly U. S.
2. Designed or fitted for, or pertaining to, execution, or carrying into effect; as, executive talent, specif., qualified for, concerned with, or pertaining to, the execution of the laws or the conduct of affairs; belonging to that branch of the government charged with such execution; as, executive power or authority; executive duties, officer, department, etc. Most political organizations are now based upon a division of the governmental powers into executive, legislative, and judicial branches, each largely independent of the other, — legislative being applied to the organ or organs of government which make the laws; judicial, to that which interprets and applies the laws, executive, to that which carries them into effect or secures their due performance. The chief executive powers are diplomatic representation, commandership in chief of the armed forces, superintendence of the execution of the laws, and appointment of officials, with more or less power over legislation, as in the veto, the initiation of legislation and dissolution of the legislature, or the like. In the United States (by Art. II. sec. 1 of the Constitution) and in France the executive powers are vested in the President, and in the British and German empires in the king (see CABINET, 7) or emperor. See LEGISLATURE, JUDICIARY.
Just as the legislature cannot be shut out of all participation in the work of administration, so the executive authority cannot be deprived of all participation in . . . legislation. F. J. Goodnow.
3. Of or pertaining to construction or technique.
He produced . . . very much for the organ alone that has never been equaled . . . as a vehicle for executive display. Encyc. Brit.
executive council, Polit. Science, a body of men constituted to give advice to, or exercise some control over, the executive. Such a body existed in most of the British colonies of America, and survives as such in some of the States of the United States. In other States and in the Federal government the Senate, or upper house of the Legislature, exercises the function to a greater or less degree. The powers of the Senate of the United States as such a council are restricted to confirmation of, or the refusal to confirm, appointments of the most important officers and to ratify treaties. In Great Britain the body having this function is styled the King's Privy Council, or more truly the Cabinet; in Canada, the King's Privy Council for Canada; in Australia, the Federal Executive Council; the council in all three cases nominally holding office at the pleasure of the executive. The executive council of France has both legislative and administrative functions. The German executive council is styled the Federal Council. — e. session, a session of an executive council, as of the United States Senate when acting in that capacity. A session of the United States Senate acting in the capacity of an executive council may be either secret or open.

ex-ec'u-tive, n. 1. The executive branch of a government; the person or persons who constitute the executive magistracy of a state. In the United States applied specif. to the President and to the governors of States.
2. Hence, any person or body charged with administrative or executive work.

ex-ec'u-tor (ĕg-zĕk'ū-tẽr; ĕk-sĕk'- ; 277; in sense 1, ĕk'-sẽ-kū'tẽr), n. [L. executor, exsecutor: cf. F. exécuteur. Cf. EXECUTER.] 1. One who executes something, as a purpose, duty, function, work, etc.; variously, a doer, performer, agent, enforcer, an executioner (Obs.), etc.
2. Law. The person appointed by a testator to execute his will, or to see its provisions carried into effect, after his decease. The executor is the personal representative of the testator, with functions at present practically the same as those of an administrator of a will. In early English law, however, the executor corresponded somewhat to the Roman heres, in having the right to retain the residue of the (personal) estate after meeting the charges imposed upon the estate. The title of the executor vests at once upon the testator's death. By statute in some States of the United States, and by Act of 1897 in Great Britain, the executor has been given jurisdiction over real estate similar to that had over personalty.

executor de son tort (dē sôn tôrt). [OF., executor of his own wrong.] Law. A person who without legal authority assumes the control or disposition of a decedent's goods or property as if he were executor. He is responsible for what comes into his possession, and has many of the liabilities, without the rights, of an executor.
